Animal rights lobby scents victory

MPs vote in favour of hunting ban

By Philip Webster and Alice Thomson

THE decades-long campaign to abolish blood sports reached its most important landmark yesterday with the first Commons vote in favour of a ban on fox-hunting.

A Labour backbencher's Bill that would also outlaw stag-hunting and hare-coursing was carried without opposition as the supporters of hunting accepted that defeat was inevitable and deliberately boycotted the vote. Although several spoke in favour of hunting during the five-hour debate, they all stayed out of the division lobbies in an attempt to deny the result legitimacy.

As a result, John McFall's Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill was given a second reading by 253 votes to nil, a result greeted with cheering inside the Commons chamber and in the public gallery. Thirty Conservative MPs supported the measure as tens of thousands of country sports supporters gathered at rallies across the country to protest against it.

It was an emotional debate in which animal rights supporters pitted themselves against the backers of traditional countryside pursuits, who said that hunting was the most humane way to keep the fox population down.

The vote probably was the beginning of the end for rural pastimes that have divided communities and politicians for generations. By last night countryside sports organisations were saying that one day fishing and shooting could be under threat as well.

Mr McFall said it was an "historic vote that signals the end of fox-hunting and other deeply cruel activities".

The RSPCA, one of the Bill's main backers, and the League Against Cruel Sports said the end of bloodsports was in sight. "This is a historic first step towards a better deal for Britain's wild animals," the RSPCA said. "It is just a matter of time before wild mammals get full protection in the law." The league, the main anti-hunting body, said it had been one of the most glorious days in its history. "The vast majority of the public clearly want to see hunting banned and today is one great step nearer that goal," it said.

The British Field Sports Society denied that the vote had been a condemnation of hunting. Its chairman, Dr Charles Goodson-Wickes, the Tory MP, said: "There is absolutely no prospect of this Bill reaching the statute book unless in committee Mr McFall will drop the anti-country sports provisions."

The Bill, which also protects squirrels and hedgehogs from unnecessary cruelty, is not expected to become law. Its opponents are likely to make use of legitimate parliamentary tactics to block it during committee stage. Without the help of the Government, such a controversial Bill could not hope to be granted enough parliamentary time to get through.

However, the anti-hunting lobby was scenting ultimate victory last night. To have secured a Commons majority for its cause while the country is governed by the Conservatives, traditionally the hunting party, was a great milestone. It left the lobby saying that eventually the will of Parliament would be fulfilled.

A Labour government would allow a free vote on the issue and then introduce the necessary legislation if it was approved; that means that it would be certain to be enacted.

The vote marked a sea change in attitudes towards animal welfare after years of impassioned campaigning. Only three years ago a similar Bill failed when 180 Tories, including 14 cabinet members, turned out to vote it down by 12 votes.

Elliot Morley, speaking from the Labour said the "days of hunting are numbered. In the not too distant future, people will look back with amazement that this House has allowed people to inflict deliberate cruelty and stress on wild animals in the name of entertainment."

Sir Andrew Bowden, a Tory sponsor of the Bill, said: "This is a great day for animal welfare. It's a victory I have been waiting for for 25 years."

British fraud inquiry begins as Leeson stays in German jail

By Patricia Tehan and Dominic Kennedy

THE Serious Fraud Office has launched an investigation into allegations of fraud at Barings as Nicholas Leeson, the trader blamed for the bank's collapse, indicated yesterday that he would prefer to face trial in Britain and avoid extradition to Singapore.

An SFO spokesman said: "Allegations of fraud in Singapore relating to the activities of a trader employed at Barings bank have been made. The SFO, in conjunction with the City of London police, are investigating these allegations as far as they might relate to England."

In Frankfurt, Mr Leeson's lawyer said his client, who arrived there on Thursday ending a week on the run, would fight extradition to Singapore to face deception charges and had information that could "damage other people at Barings". Mr Leeson will remain on remand in a German prison for the estimated three month duration of his case.

A trio of finance police from Singapore had arrived in Frankfurt to bolster their case while a British policeman was due to land in the German city last night.

Kenneth Clarke, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that a full investigation would be launched into claims that senior executives at Barings were warned six months ago that Mr Leeson could override the bank's controls.

The Chancellor said that until the Board of Banking Supervision had completed its investigation into the affair, it would be impossible to say whether anything had gone wrong at Barings.

As the Bank of England's team continues to analyse Barings's accounts, a High Court judge was last night on standby to approve the sale of the businesses to a Dutch banking group, which has been given a period of exclusive negotiating rights by the administrators appointed by Ernst & Young. If Internationale Nederlanden Groep (ING) is successful, the Dutch bank will pay £1 for most of Baring Brothers & Co bank, Baring Securities and Baring Asset Management, and take on its liabilities.

The Bank of England's investigators are looking into the role of directors to ensure they exercised proper control. It emerged yesterday that Peter Norris, the chief executive of investment banking and of Baring Securities, who had overall board responsibility for Mr Leeson's trading activities, is the main director of a failed company. His firm, Duff & Trotter Limited, a food and wine merchants, ceased trading in 1989, but he appears to have been meeting its liabilities since then.

The basis of the SFO inquiry is understood to be information concerning representations made by Mr Leeson to his London head office which has been given to the SFO by Barings. The SFO was not attempting to have Mr Leeson extradited to England.

Dean faces church court over woman's sex charge

By Ruth Gledhill, Religion Correspondent

THE Dean of Lincoln, the Very Rev Brandon Jackson, is to be accused in a church court of having an "improper" sexual relationship with a woman member of the cathedral congregation.

Dr Jackson, 60, married with three children, will face charges in the consistory court of "conduct unbecoming the office and work of a clerk in holy orders", the Bishop of Lincoln, the Right Rev Robert Hardy, said yesterday. If found guilty, he could be dismissed from his job as incumbent of the cathedral.

Bishop Hardy began the legal proceedings against Dr Jackson after the woman alleged that "with her own consent, and indeed encouragement, the dean engaged in an improper, albeit brief, sexual relationship with her." Dr Jackson, who has taken leave of absence until the court hearing, has denied the allegations, made in February last year. Dr Jackson is the most senior clergyman in recent history to face such a charge. Bishop Hardy has instituted proceedings under the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963. The examiner at a preliminary hearing last month decided that Dr Jackson *should face trial in a consis*tory court. A statement issued on behalf of the bishop by his assistant, Canon Raymond Rodger, said: "The dean continues to assert that he is innocent of the matters alleged against him and in the circumstances it would be quite inappropriate for the bishop to express any opinion about the matter until it is heard by the consistory court."

He said the bishop had the power to suspend the dean. "The bishop has not considered it appropriate in this case to suspend the dean, who has continued to fulfil his duties in and connected with the cathedral.

"However, in view of the pressure which the forthcoming consistory court hearing is likely to place upon the dean personally and the consequent effect upon his family and the cathedral congregation, it has been agreed at the dean's request that he will have leave of absence from the cathedral until the consistory court hearing takes place." Snow blocks roads and closes schools

By Harvey Elliott

SCHOOLS were closed, roads blocked and thousands of homes left without power yesterday as snow brought chaos to much of the country.

The snow, driven by a northwest wind, fell in the early hours over much of Wales, the Midlands and East Anglia, cutting off hundreds of villages and making the journey to work a slippery nightmare for millions. Temperatures were expected to fall again overnight.

The weekend forecast promises cold with more snow and rain showers. "It's too late in the year for any snow really to build up," a spokesman at the London Weather Centre said. "There is a small low-pressure area off Ireland which might just sweep across the country and bring more snow showers, but we have seen the worst of this weather for the time being."

AA patrols answered twice as many calls as usual yesterday and a busy weekend is expected if the bad weather continues. A spokesman said motorways and A-class roads would be relatively clear, but conditions on minor roads were likely to be extremely hazardous, with some still blocked by snow.

On Thursday night, Birmingham international airport closed for two hours. Four flights were diverted to Manchester and passengers had to be brought back to Birmingham by bus as snow built up on the runways.

In Staffordshire, a coach carrying 25 passengers overturned in heavy snow and caused chaos on the M6. Passengers scrambled out after the vehicle rolled on to its side.

California pizza thief is given life sentence

From Ben Macintyre in New York

DICKENSIAN England is often cited as a society in which a child could go to prison for stealing a handkerchief but in California a man has been jailed for life after taking a slice of pizza from a child.

That dubious legal milestone was passed on Thursday, when Jerry Dewayne Williams was given a life sentence — a minimum of 25 years — under the state's "three strikes and you're out" law, which requires such a sentence for anybody with two previous convictions for serious crimes. Williams, 27, has a considerable criminal appetite with prior convictions for armed robbery, attempted robbery and drug possession, but it was a more basic hunger that made him the focus of furious legal debate.

On July 30 last year Williams, who is 6ft 4in and weighs 17 stone, was walking along the pier at Redondo Beach, Los Angeles, and saw four children aged between seven and 14 sharing a large pizza. When they refused to give him a slice, he simply took it.

He did not, in fact, eat it the pizza but threw it into the sea because, as he later told police, he does not like pepperoni and has an allergy to pork. On the witness stand Williams denied intimidating the youngsters, and even claimed to have thanked the children as he walked away laughing.

That did not deter California's new "three-strikes" law from grinding into action. After a report from the owner of the pizza shop, Williams was arrested and charged with petty theft, usually classed as a misdemenour. But under the new law and given Williams's four previous felony convictions, two of them defined as "serious", prosecutors were able to increase the charges to "felonious petty theft" and thus demand the maximum penalty of life imprisonment for three felonies.

The "three strikes" law was enacted last March amid public outrage over the case of a 12-year-old girl murdered by a man with a history of violent crime who was on parole.

Several states are planning to enact the legislation. An appeal is certain to be lodged and the case may come before the Supreme Court.

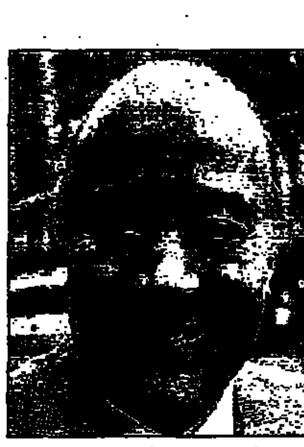
Fayeds turned down for citizenship

By Damian Whitworth and Stewart Tendler



Mohamed Al Fayed: legal action ahead

MOHAMED AL FAYED, the Harrods' chairman, and his brother Ali are threatening legal action against the Home Secretary after their applications for British citizenship were rejected.

The Egyptian-born brothers, resident in Britain for more than 30 years, are prepared to take their case to the High Court for judicial review and, if that fails, to the European courts.

In a statement, the brothers claimed yesterday that the Home Office decision was unfair and based on prejudice. They said they had been given no reasons for the refusal and were seeking an explanation.

The qualifications for naturalisation under the British Nationality Act 1981 include residential requirements, no breaches of immigration regulations and good character. Last night the Home Office declined to comment on the case.

The Fayeds have often been at the centre of controversy and in 1990 a Department of Trade and Industry report on the House of Fraser takeover concluded they had misrepresented their origins, wealth and business interests in the bid. Last year Mohamed Al Fayed, was cleared by police of trying to blackmail the Government in the controversy over MPs accepting cash for questions.

The decision to reject their naturalisation applications was taken by Nicholas Baker, the Immigration Minister. According to Home Office sources, the regulations do not require reasons to be given, and it is claimed the brothers were treated like other applicants who went through the full procedures to a ministerial decision.

Ali Fayed, who has a British wife and three British sons, applied for British citizenship on January 30, 1993. Mohamed Al Fayed, who together with his Finnish wife has two British sons and two British daughters, applied on February 15, 1994. Mr Al Fayed said: "My brother and I have lived here for a long time and have made substantial investment in British commerce, as well as making a positive contribution to other aspects of life in the country."

Michael Cole, a spokesman for the brothers, said they had right of residence in Britain and would not leave. Although they had applied separately, they had received identical letters each with one sentence signed by a civil servant turning down their applications.

Last year, Mr Al Fayed denied that his allegations that two government ministers would accept cash in return for asking parliamentary questions were linked to the way his brother's application was being handled. He said he understood the application had been stalled at ministerial level.

In October, he alleged that Tim Smith, then a junior Northern Ireland minister and Neil Hamilton, then a trade and industry minister, had accepted cash from him in exchange for asking questions in the Commons on his behalf. Mr Hamilton vigorously denied the allegation and resigned from the Government to clear his name. Mr Smith also resigned: he admitted receiving money and not having declared it in the Register of Members' Interests at the right time. Mr Al Fayed said at the time he was not acting out of revenge but wanted to expose what he claimed was hypocrisy in government.

Under the Nationality Act an applicant must be over 18; be of sound mind; be of good character; have sufficient knowledge of English; and intend if naturalised to make his home in the UK. An applicant must have lived in this country over the past five years. He can be out of the country for 450 days during those five years and in the year before the application must have spent no more than 90 days out of the country.

Jobs ban for former ministers unlikely

A two-year ban on former ministers moving to sensitive jobs in the private sector is unlikely to be recommended by the Nolan committee. Lord Nolan had been reported as backing the proposal to instigate a waiting period similar to those imposed on senior civil servants when they leave government service. The idea was supported by several former ministers who appeared before his inquiry, including Lord Young of Graffham and Sir Norman Fowler.

But although committee insiders said no decision had yet been reached, many now favoured a "mandatory guidance procedure", the details of which remain under discussion. However, the committee is unanimous that the status quo, supported by the Government, is unacceptable. Lord Nolan, who has been appointed for three years, will produce his first report in May.

Backing for carers Bill

A Private Member's Bill to help people who act as unpaid carers was given an unopposed second reading in the Commons yesterday and is set to become law. The Bill requires councils to assess the needs of carers and provide them with support. The measure, put forward by Malcolm Wicks, a Labour MP, was backed by the Government.

Mutilated boy saved

A five-year-old boy whose genitals were cut off by a man with a knife was recovering yesterday after hours of microsurgery. St Andrew's Hospital in Billericay, Essex, said the operation was successful. The boy was attacked at his home in Wood Green, north London. Last night police were questioning his father.

Widow loses claim

Diane Osborne, the widow of a music teacher who was stabbed to death after confronting a vandal in south London, has lost her battle for compensation. The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board has rejected her appeal against a decision to refuse her claim. It had ruled against her because her husband Bob was carrying a hammer.

Mother wins damages

A woman whose brain was damaged by a hospital blunder after giving birth was awarded £845,000 damages in the High Court yesterday. Sandra Scott, 46, was robbed of her memory after being given a solution of potassium chloride instead of water at the Mayday Hospital, Croydon, Surrey, after her son Adam, now six, was born.

Mendy gets seven years

The sports agent, Ambrose Mendy, 40, of Wanstead, east London, has been jailed for seven years by Middlesex Guildhall Crown Court for a £4 million bank fraud plot. Edmund Parkinson, 45, of Kentish Town, north London, was sentenced to 2½ years and Michael Marsden, 40, a financial consultant of Barking, east London, to one year.

Burns man confesses

A man who claimed he had been set alight in a revenge attack has admitted he accidently set himself on fire as he lit a cigarette while holding a can of petrol, police disclosed yesterday. Andrew King, 30, of Halifax, West Yorkshire, is still in hospital with severe burns to the lower part of his body 17 days after he was engulfed in flames.

Dean's case

the Church of England, is an established part of the English legal system.

The case will be before Judge Michael Goodman, diocesan chancellor, acting as the bishop's officer, and who will sit with two lay and two clergy assistants. Derek Wellman, the diocesan registrar, will be clerk of the court.

Dr Jackson said that he hoped the latest controversy to hit the cathedral would eventually benefit it. "It has had hundreds of years of unhappiness and conflict. The cathedral cannot return to normal after this, and there will have to be a fundamental shake-up. Out of this evil I am confronting, good will come." He added: "My wife is supporting me totally, although she is very angry about the way it is being treated."

The 13th century cathedral, with 14th century additions and visible for miles from its position on a ridge, is considered the finest of English cathedrals but has been subject to repeated controversy since Dr Jackson was appointed dean by Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister in 1989. She is said to have told her appointments secretary she did not know Dr Jackson personally but "I know of him — there'll be blood on the carpet of Lincoln Cathedral before he's finished."

Lincoln cathedral was last in the headlines over a loss-making exhibition of its copy of the Magna Carta in Australia in 1988.

Leeson's lawyer backs prospect of British trial

By Dominic Kennedy in Frankfurt

NICK LEESON'S lawyer yesterday suggested that the banker might agree to face trial in Britain to avoid being extradited to Singapore.

He spoke as Mr Leeson, 28, prepared to spend his first night in the German prison cell from where he will resist attempts by the Singapore authorities to have him returned on deception charges which he strongly denies.

Mr Leeson, it emerged, had flown from the Far East to Frankfurt only because the plane to London had been full.

Mr Leeson's lawyer hinted that his client "knew where the bodies were buried at Barings bank" but was not yet prepared to name names.

The whereabouts of Mr Leeson's wife Lisa, 26, were unknown last night. She is believed to have been flown to Fairoaks airfield at Chobham, Surrey, in a privately chartered aircraft, accompanied by her parents Alec and Patsy Sims.

Meanwhile a British police officer was arriving in Frankfurt for possible liaison with the German authorities and a trio of Singapore finance police who delivered documents backing their government's plea for extradition.

Eberhard Kempf, Mr Leeson's German lawyer, when asked whether his client knew anything that could implicate other people, replied: "Sure, I assume he has information that could damage other people at Barings."

Mr Leeson's immediate future was sealed when the regional court in Frankfurt decided that he should be remanded into provisional extradition custody on charges of falsifying documents. The public prosecutor said Leeson was accused of falsification of documents with intent to deceive to the disadvantage of his company and partners, and breach of trust.

Mr Leeson was then taken to a modern, brown-brick prison in the suburb of Hoechst where he will spend about four months trying to avoid being returned to Singapore.

Mr Kempf said his client had contacted a British lawyer who was due to arrive in Frankfurt next week. Mr Leeson's first opportunity to challenge the decision to remand him will be next week.

Nick Leeson being escorted to a prison van

Fugitive's story may fetch £250,000

By Kathryn Knight

AS NICK LEESON'S lawyer announced his intention to fight extradition to Singapore yesterday, a potentially more brutal fight got underway in the media world.

Max Clifford, the public relations adviser, is believed to have negotiated a deal with Mr Leeson to help him to sell his story. Sums of up to £250,000 are being mentioned to secure exclusive rights to the Leeson saga.

Lisa Leeson is back in England at a secret address with her parents. Her husband is understood to have telephoned Mr Clifford earlier this week to ask for advice.

Mr Clifford said that Mr Leeson was very keen to sell his side of the story. "He wants the world to know that he's been the victim of great injustice."

The Mail on Sunday offered to fly Lisa's parents to Singapore and look after them "for as long as it takes" until Mr Leeson's return, according to one industry insider.

The Sun, meanwhile, apparently offered Mrs Leeson at least £50,000 for her story, although Mr Clifford believes that she could get at least double that amount if she chose to speak.

TYPICAL EXAMPLE FIXED UNTIL 1ST JANUARY 1998. For home purchase loans the loan must not exceed 95% of the purchase price / valuation, whichever is the lower. A booking fee of £250 is also payable for loans up to £100,000 (or 0.25% of the advance for loans of £100,000 and above). The booking fee is payable on application. Two of the Society's general (mortgage related) insurance products are compulsory. A mortgage of £50,000 completed on February 28th taken out on an "Interest Only" basis, with one capital repayment of £50,000 being made at the end of the term, over 25 years on a purchase price of £70,000 would attract an APR of 8.4% (variable). Gross monthly interest only mortgage repayments of £266.44 during the mortgage term. This includes an Insurance loading of £35.52 for Buildings and Contents Insurance. Total amount payable £160,481.88 includes the mortgage advance of £50,000, £117.50 solicitors fees (these fees are not applicable to mortgages in Scotland and Northern Ireland. Customers there should contact their local solicitor for details), Valuation Administration fee £140.00 (of which £40 is an administration fee), Sealing fee of £50.00 and accrued interest of £36.37 for the period February 28th. A booking fee of £250 is also payable at the mortgage application stage and is not refundable under any circumstances. The interest rate will be fixed until 01/01/98 thereafter the rate will become variable. Example assumes an interest rate of 7.99% during the mortgage term. For loans that redeem (in full or in part) within the fixed rate period, the Society reserves the right to charge an additional 3 months interest. This will be waived if a subsequent mortgage is taken through Bradford & Bingley Building Society. A Mortgage Guarantee charge is not payable for this example. For loans which exceed 75% of the purchase price / valuation (whichever is the lower) the Society may require additional security in form of a Mortgage Guarantee charge, depending on the amount borrowed. Rates quoted are variable, so therefore is the APR. Loans subject to status and valuation. Mortgage security is required. Written quotations are available on request from this office or write to Bradford & Bingley Building Society, Main Street, Bingley, West Yorkshire BD16 2LW. Mortgages are only available to persons aged 18 or over.

Fears for solo yachtsman, 70, in round-the-world race

From Barry Pickthall in San Diego

HARRY MITCHELL, a 70-year-old making his third attempt to race solo around the world, appears to have run into trouble deep in the southern ocean, 1,500 miles west of Cape Horn.

Rescue authorities picked up the automatic signal from the emergency position indicating radio beacon fitted to his 40-ft yacht, Henry Hornblower, late on Thursday night. But all attempts to reach him by radio and satellite have failed.

Winds in this desolate area in the Furious Fifty latitudes were gusting between 65 and 70 knots yesterday, and attempts to raise a second sailor in the race, Minoru Saito of Japan, by radio, who was 232 miles from Mitchell's position, had also failed. Mitchell's emergency beacon has a battery life of only 48 hours, and with Saito representing his only hope of immediate rescue, should his yacht have sunk, race organisers in Punta del Este, Uruguay, and Charleston, South Carolina, were trying to make contact throughout last night.

Rescue authorities in Hawaii, Cornwall, and Chile were also alerted, and last night were assessing what rescue resources were available to locate the sailor before his batteries expired.

Mitchell, a former garage owner from Portsmouth, entered his first BOC Challenge round-the-world race in 1986, but was forced to retire after running aground at Bluff on the South Island of New Zealand.

Four years later, his second attempt to fulfil a lifelong dream to sail around the world also came to grief when his yacht hit a ship in the English Channel during his first night at sea.

He entered for the third time last September. Mr Mitchell's wife Diana said last night: "I just hope that his beacon has gone off inadvertently and it is a false alarm."

Mrs Mitchell, of Southsea, Hampshire, added: "It has been his lifelong ambition to sail round the world single-handed. I know he is 70 but he is still more than capable of sailing his yacht and he absolutely loves it."

bury and Chipping Norton among the worst affected. Hundreds of schools across the region were closed, including all 457 local education authority schools in Birmingham.

In Wales, where almost 8in of snow fell, more than 20,000 homes were without power. Heavy snow forced 140 schools to close.

London Underground's de-icing trains failed to cope with the conditions, but few people living south of the North Circular Road were affected by the wintry conditions. To the north and west of the capital, however, the lines were closed during the morning rush hour.

Today's racing at Newbury, Doncaster and Warwick is under threat with all three courses being subjected to an early morning inspection. But the international rugby match at Murrayfield should not be affected.

'I hope this does not deter genuine victims from reporting a heinous crime'

Red Dwarf star cleared of gang rape charges

By Michael Horsnell

ROBIN MAYES

Craig Charles, with his solicitor, Howard Stacey, calling for a change in the law governing rape publicity

CRAIG CHARLES, star of the science fiction television series Red Dwarf, was cleared yesterday of orchestrating a gang rape. The Liverpool comic actor, who had received legal aid, sobbed and smiled in the dock after his acquittal but later attacked the "lamentable" case against him.

Speaking outside Southwark Crown Court at the end of his ten-day trial, Mr Charles said: "I hope that the publicity does not deter genuine rape victims from reporting what is in fact a heinous crime and a crime against humanity. Now I just want to get on with my life, get on with my job and get back to what I do best."

The prosecution had alleged that Mr Charles, 30, and his co-defendant, John Peploe, a company director, had gone with an untraced third man to the south London flat of a former Soho stripper and bound and blindfolded her. They were each cleared of rape and four counts of indecent assault. The jury of eight men and four women took one hour and 40 minutes to reach its verdicts. Stephen Solley, QC, defending Mr Charles, had pointed to "key gaps" in the Crown case and described prosecution evidence as "completely unacceptable, inadequate and half-hearted sort of forensic evidence". After being taken to a police rape suite, the woman had been allowed to go home because no doctor was available. She washed and it was 30 hours before she was medically examined.

There was no DNA evidence and the jury heard that despite many forensic tests nothing was found which showed that the two men had taken part in sex acts which the woman described.

Mr Charles, aged 30, of Kennington, south London, faces an uncertain future after low-life admissions in court which have damaged his cosy image as the loveable "Scouse in your house".

He had admitted snorting cocaine at the home of the woman who accused him, a 38-year-old single mother with whom he had had a relationship. Mr Charles maintained that he had called on her for a "bacon butty" breakfast at 6am last July 8 after spending the night in Soho.

The son of a Liverpool lorry driver, Mr Charles has already lost an estimated £250,000 in TV and radio appearances, commercial voice-overs and corporate videos since last July when he began four months on remand before receiving bail.

The actor said after the case: "This is the end of a nine-month nightmare for me and my family. For three-and-a-half months I was locked up for 23 hours a day and forced to urinate and defecate in a bucket in front of other people. And what is horrendous is that all the lies the so-called victim told in court and were printed by the press were easily revealed by my QC, Stephen Solley, under cross-examination and were therefore there for any fair-minded police officer to see."

Saying that the case should never have come to court, he commented: "As an innocent man I'm appalled about the publicity that this case has brought. The fact that my name and address along with my picture can appear on the front of the papers before the so-called victim has even signed a statement proves that anonymity for rape defendants is a must and that the law must be changed."

Commander Tom Williamson, chairman of the Metropolitan Police serious sexual offences committee, said after the trial: "Our procedures normally work effectively. We are now reviewing the rota system for forensic medical examinations."

Mystic jailed for indecent assault

By Richard Duce

A MYSTIC Indian faith heal·. was jailed for six months yesterday for indecently assaulting a young woman he was treating for depression.

Tayavalappil Krishnan, who has kept a vow of silence for 33 years, was sentenced at Manchester Crown Court for attacking the woman, 19, who had turned to him for help. Krishnan, 65, known to his followers in India as Baba the silent healer, had communicated with his barrister through notes and on his conviction produced a character reference from the Indian High Commissioner.

Judge Singer told him: "It appears there is no person incapable of a criminal offence."

Krishnan was visiting Britain in 1993 when he assaulted the woman at an address in Manchester while massaging her with oils. She had turned to him because she suffered trauma after a car crash. The judge told him the offence "was committed by a man of stature and wisdom on a vulnerable young woman who had come to him for help when in difficulty".

Krishnan, who adopted the name Baba after being influenced by the mystic Meher Baba who kept silent for 40 years, believes that speaking would diminish his healing power.

Krishnan denied indecent assault. He said in notes to his defence team: "The thought of sex was not in my mind."

TV show cancels runaway's interview

By Kathryn Knight and Alexandra Frean

CHANNEL 4 last night cancelled a live interview from New York with the runaway schoolboy Peter Kerry on its youth programme The Word, after his headmaster criticised the trip.

Peter, 14, sparked an international hunt when he ran away to Malaysia using his father's credit card and passport ten days ago.

Channel 4 decided hours before the programme was due to go on air not to go ahead with the item. A spokesman said: "The key factor was the concern expressed by Peter's school." He said that the channel had not been aware that Langley Grammar near Slough, Berkshire, had refused permission for Peter to miss school.

Earlier, Dr Alan Robinson, Peter's headmaster, had condemned the trip, saying it would send "all the wrong signals" to other schoolchildren. Dr Robinson said that Peter had not attended school since his return from Malaysia earlier this week.

"The parents should have taken a firmer line this week. He has taken Friday off and will not be in school on Monday either. By going to the US with Channel 4 he is effectively being rewarded for going to Malaysia," he said.

Peter was due to return to England in the early hours of Monday morning, when he will be interviewed by police and could face forgery charges for allegedly disguising his father's passport photograph.

Soho doorgirl to pay for scaring £144 cola boy

By A Staff Reporter

Malone: planning to breed Siamese cats

A DOORGIRL at a striptease club was yesterday ordered to pay compensation to a 16-year-old boy for his emotional distress after he was lured inside and made to pay £144 for a can of cola.

Clair Malone, 20, threatened to tell his parents that he had visited the Soho club Erotica unless he paid a £500 bill she gave him. Malone, formerly from Dublin, was put on 18 months' probation and instructed to do 100 hours' community service for blackmailing the boy.

Recorder Chadwin, QC, who ordered her to pay £70 to her victim, said at the Old Bailey: "He said he was terrified out of his wits. I have power for him to be compensated for the emotional distress he no doubt endured."

The Recorder said that "to some extent" the boy, who cannot be named for legal reasons, had brought it on himself by going into the club. "He is a very young man and I am not here to censure him."

The boy had ordered a cola, which he was told would cost £4.50. But he was not shown the club tariff listing non-alcoholic cocktails at £109 and £67. He had not seen a striptease show but was handed a bill for £500. When he protested he was told the club would contact his parents.

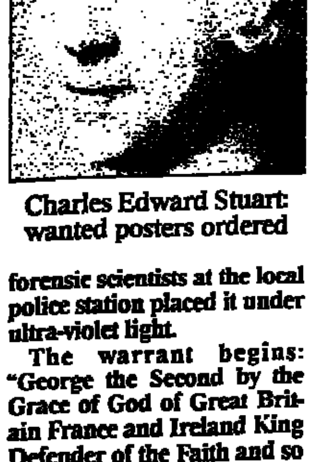
Malone produced a form and told him to write down his name and address. He later drew out £114 from a cash machine and promised to pay the rest the following weekend. "I went home feeling scared and frightened. They seemed very serious about telling my parents. I knew what my father would be like," the boy had told the court.

When his mother discovered that his bank account was overdrawn he revealed what had happened. He had travelled to London from his Surrey home to buy a pornographic video and pretended to be 18 to get into the club.

Malone, who lived in Soho at the time, has severed her links with the club and had no intention of taking up that type of work again, the court was told. She was neglected as a child and found it difficult to stand for long periods after undergoing surgery when she was 11. After her conviction last month Malone was terrified that she would be sent to prison, Francis Gilbert, her counsel, said.

Recorder Chadwick said that as a result of considerable publicity Malone had also lost her good name "in a very public and humiliating way". She now hoped to breed Siamese cats.

Museum stumbles on arrest warrant for Young Pretender



Charles Edward Stuart: wanted posters ordered

THE royal warrant for the arrest of Bonnie Prince Charlie, who led the Highland clans in the ill-fated 1745 rebellion against Hanoverian rule, has been discovered in a small museum (Lucy Berrington writes).

The "priceless" but unprepossessing writ was issued by George II in an attempt to apprehend the fugitive prince. It offered a £30,000 reward, the equivalent of £1.5 million today, for the capture of the Young Pretender and instructed the sheriff who received the writ to display wanted posters.

Staff at the Elgin Museum in Moray had long held a copy of the poster but came across an additional document when preparing an exhibition. The manuscript, measuring only 2in by 8in and so faded that it was illegible, had lain for more than a century in the backroom archives of the museum. The wording materialised three days ago when forensic scientists at the local police station placed it under ultra-violet light.

The warrant begins: "George the Second by the Grace of God of Great Britain France and Ireland King Defender of the Faith and so forth. To Our Sheriff of Elgin Greeting. We Command you ... cause publickly and solemnly to be Proclaimed a certain Proclamation ... in distinct and publick places that it may more plainly appear to Our Subjects and Liege People."

Jim Inglis, the museum curator, said: "There's no way you can even think about pricing it. I wouldn't tell you anyway: the last thing I want is the bandits to come out of the hills all over again."

Attributed to "guardians and trustees of the Kingdom", the writ was donated in 1860 by Captain James Stewart of Lesmurdie, a member of the Moray Society which set up the museum 24 years earlier. The prince stayed in Elgin for three days while his army marched towards Culloden in 1746.

Despite the price on his head, Charles Edward Stuart was never betrayed or captured and escaped after Culloden, the last battle on British soil, after disguising himself as a woman. He later drank himself into oblivion and in 1788 died in poverty on the Continent.

Owners of traditional thatched cottages may benefit as reed-bed habitats are restored

Project aims to save birds on the edge of extinction

BY NICK NUTTALL, ENVIRONMENT CORRESPONDENT

AN AMBITIOUS scheme to save one of Britain's rarest birds from extinction was launched yesterday.

The bittern is now confined to about 15 breeding pairs in Norfolk, Suffolk and Lancashire. In the 1950s there were about 80 pairs, and in the last century it was commonly served roasted.

The bittern, a shy bird that lives in reed beds and whose males make a booming sound reminiscent of someone blowing across the top of a bottle, has fallen victim to pollution, pesticides, poor management of reed beds, and land drainage. It feeds on fish and amphibians. Clear water is believed to be vital to the bird's survival as it hunts by sight.

The move to rescue the bittern is being led by English Nature, which advises the Government on wildlife and conservation.

The aim is to get 100 pairs of bitterns breeding in Britain in the next 25 years. It is the first breed to be chosen in its species recovery programme, which aims to restore more than 20 birds on the brink of extinction. Yesterday John Gummer, the Environment Secretary, dug a reed pool at Cley Marshes, Norfolk, to launch the £300,000 scheme, which also has backing from the Norfolk Wildlife Trust and Eastern Electricity.

Gummer: dug a pool to launch recovery scheme

Mr Gummer said: "The Marsh Harrier will benefit from this along with other wildlife. There is a very real chance that we can get the bittern back into the whole of the Norfolk Broads. This project will be a feeder for that but it is only relatively recently that the Broads have become protected.

"That provides the habitat protection. All we need to do now is increase the number of birds, which is what we are trying to do now."

The project, which includes the Leigston Moss reserve in Lancashire run by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, where about four pairs of bittern survive, could also restore British reed to the roofs of thatched homes. Many thatchers now use reeds from eastern Europe because increased pollution and falling water levels in the reed beds of the east coast have created stunted plants. The scheme will create a mosaic of reeds of different ages and size within which bitterns are believed to thrive.

The work at Cley will involve digging large pools within the reed bed to provide new sources of food for the birds. Dykes are also to be cleared to help to stop reed beds drying out. The area of reed beds is also to be extended into agricultural land and over disused mineral workings.

The bittern, reduced to about 15 breeding pairs in this country, is the first species to be targeted by a project to help endangered breeds

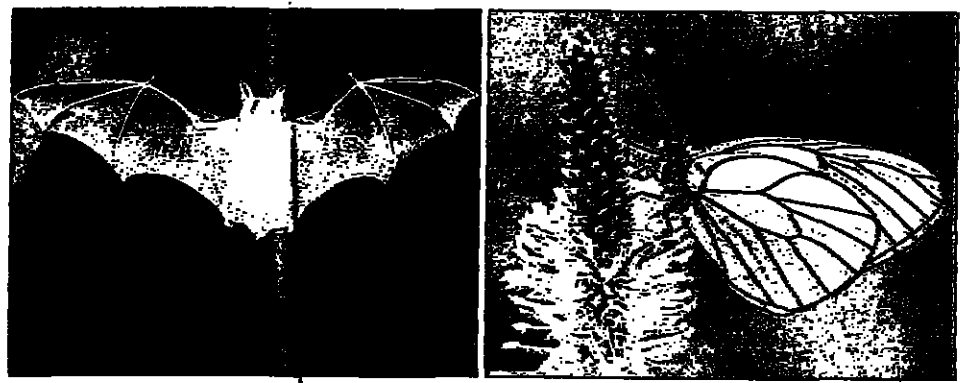
Missing species never to be seen again

THE United Kingdom has lost 150 animals and plants this century, ranging from lichens to butterflies and birds (Nick Nuttall writes). Some animals, such as the osprey and the white-tailed eagle, have been reintroduced from the Continent, but many of the lost species can never be reclaimed.

David Attenborough, the naturalist and television programme-maker, said: "At least half were found only in the United Kingdom and have therefore been lost to the world for ever."

The full list has been compiled by groups that include the RSPB and the World Wide Fund for Nature to remind the Government of its wildlife and biodiversity commitments made at Rio de Janeiro three years ago.

Until 1983, visitors to Widewater Lagoon at Shoreham, West Sussex, could have marvelled at Ivell's sea anenome, Edwardsia ivelli. The fawn and orange-spotted marine animal, less than an inch long and sporting 12 tentacles, has vanished from its only known home, the victim of pollution or the loss of its shrimpy food source. Dr Paul Cornelius, of the Natural History Museum in London, said: "It may exist as spores but people have looked very closely on several occasions and failed to find it."



A rare mouse-eared bat and the black-veined white butterfly, unseen in Britain since 1925

He believes the loss of a single species should be deeply regretted. "It would take a new Earth and a new Universe to be created for it to be replaced," he said.

A similar act of creation would also be needed for some of the 59 spiders and other insects, including the delicate black-veined white butterfly, Aporia crataegi, not seen in Britain since 1925.

More than 50 species of algae, including the slimy fruited stonewort, are also believed to have disappeared, with seven mosses and 13 flowering plants. Nearly 50 fungi and slime moulds have been lost to pollution and the destruction of ancient meadows. Slime moulds feed on bacteria and their loss may make trees more vunerable to infection.

The loss of parasitic fungi, several of which are believed to have also disappeared because of the use of pesticides, may appear cause for few tears. But Dr Roy Watling, of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Edinburgh, says: "You get a knock-on effect. The fungus may be the special food source for a beautiful butterfly or a hideous beetle, and you have killed a whole ecosystem."

Many lost species are humble creatures such as ground beetles, species of wild bee, burrowing wasps and flies, including the dainty, or Norfolk damselfly, which was recorded as extinct in 1957.

Others are more conspicuous. Blair's wainscot, a moth, was last recorded in 1966 after its only known site on the Isle of Wight was destroyed by draining and burning for agriculture.

Gary Roberts of Butterfly Conservation says that the large tortoiseshell was so common in the last century that Victorian collectors believed its homes were too numerous to record. But the butterfly, a lover of sheltered wooded areas, was declared extinct in the British Isles two years ago.

The mouse-eared bat joined the funeral procession three years earlier. The females in Britain's last colony in West Sussex all vanished in 1974 and the last male died in 1990 aged 19. The reason the females suddenly died could have been the felling of a single tree in which they were breeding.

Burbot, a once common eel-like fish in eastern England, was declared extinct in the late 1970s. It is believed to have suffered from overfishing by anglers and by pollution. The Kentish plover, which once bred around Dungeness, has been lost as a British bird since the 1930s.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Charter flights ban smoking

The seven biggest charter airlines are to ban smoking on all holiday flights of under six hours from November 1, accounting for 90 per cent of holiday routes.

Seven charter airlines accounting for 95 per cent of all charter seats have already agreed to the ban: Britannia, Air 2000; Air UK Leisure; Monarch; Excalibur; Airworld and Airtours International.

M-way arrests

Four people were arrested in protests over tree-felling on the planned route of the M77 extension in Glasgow. About 300 police and 300 security guards protected tree cutters.

Officer attacked

A 23-year-old police officer was in a serious but stable condition in hospital after being attacked by two men while on patrol in Greenwich, southeast London.

Sheriff to rescue

Nottingham has got a new sheriff after fears that the post would be unfilled when four councillors turned it down. He is Roy Greensmith, 65, a Labour councillor for three years.

Sinking feeling

Housework is a health hazard, according to a House Beautiful survey, which says that "everyone should be aware of the impact household chores can have on their bodies".

Garden arsenal

George Jennings, who lives near an army training area at Otterburn, Northumberland, has dug up a bomb fuse and 2,000 machinegun bullets dating from 1937 in his garden.

Falcon in a flap

A dentist has fitted a falcon that damaged its beak with a plastic replacement. Ian Watkins had been approached by George's owner, Sean Taylor, a vet, of Burnley.

Councils ready to fight Gummer on new shires review

By Ian Murray, Community Correspondent

THE Association of County Councils said yesterday that it would take the Government to court if it tried to bring in new guidelines for the fresh review of much of shire England announced this week.

John Gummer, the Environment Secretary, has said he will issue "new guidance" to the reconstituted Local Government Commission before it carries out the review he has ordered in up to 17 areas. Last year the High Court said that the Government had acted illegally in issuing guidelines instructing the commission to opt for all-purpose unitary authorities. If Mr Gummer tries to reissue similar guidelines, the association will challenge them in the courts again.

Baroness Farrington of Ribbleton, the association's chairman, said that the review would cost a great deal of money. "It is amazing that at a time when, on the Government's own admission, local authorities' finances are very tight, it is proposing to spend yet more money on the review of local government," she said. "All of the costs mean diverting resources from frontline services.

County treasurers affected by the review gave warning that it would cost hundreds of thousands of pounds. Richard Paver, treasurer in Northamptonshire, said: "We have just been forced to cut £20 million from our budget and now we are going to have to spend time and effort on something that we thought was behind us. It is very destabilising."

Officials in Cambridgeshire, which now has to prepare for another review in Peterborough and a possible review in Huntingdon, was even more gloomy. "This will cost us money at a time when we have been forced to cut £10 million from our budget," a spokesman said. "This is a huge waste of precious resources at a time we can ill-afford it. After four years of waiting we now find that the uncertainty is going to continue. This makes long-term planning impossible and is ruining the morale of the staff."

Sir John Banham, who resigned as chairman of the commission when Mr Gummer ordered the fresh review, said yesterday that he fell foul of the Government "because I listened to the people rather than to politicians with vested interests".

He said that he had made his recommendations to preserve the staus quo in most of England only after the most intensive consultation process. "My advice to my successor, whoever that is, is to listen to the people and not to the politicians."

Kenneth Clarke doing an interview in York after his Radio Newcastle gaffe

Chancellor drops a clanger over closed steelworks

By Philip Webster and Paul Wilkinson

KENNETH CLARKE blundered yesterday by praising the performance of a steelworks in the North East that was closed 15 years ago. The gaffe by the Chancellor during a BBC Radio Newcastle interview left him wiping egg from his face for the rest of the day.

He had spoken of Consett in Co Durham as having one of the best steelworks in Europe. Minutes later, and uncorrected by a cruel interviewer, he spoke of the "success of Consett".

Consett closed in 1980 with the loss of 4,000 jobs, an issue of abiding sensitivity in the region. It was only after the presenter recalled the demise of Consett that Mr Clarke explained that he was talking about the steelworks at Redcar, Cleveland.

For the rest of the day derision was heaped upon the hapless Mr Clarke. "These people have closed down so much of British industry that they cannot be expected to remember all of it," Brian Wilson, Labour trade and industry spokesman, said.

Kevin Earley, deputy leader of the staunchly Labour Derwentside council, which includes Consett, said: "Does he think Swan Hunter on Tyneside is still open and also Easington colliery?"

Jack Cunningham, the Shadow Trade Secretary, said: "If the people of northern England needed any further convincing that the Tory Government has lost touch with reality, Kenneth Clarke has provided it." Alan Beith, the Liberal Democrat deputy leader, said: "The Tories do not know one end of the North East from the other."

Pressed on the incident later Mr Clarke said: "It was a slip of the tongue. I just got the two towns mixed up. Anyone who says I am unfeeling towards the North East because of this is completely daft."

One in 10 staff sick daily at NHS trust

By Paul Wilkinson

UP TO 400 employees of a health trust in northwest England are reporting sick every day, mainly because of stress. It is setting up a trauma support group to counsel overstretched staff.

The North Mersey Community Trust, which covers four hospitals in the Liverpool area, caring mainly for elderly or mentally ill patients, is spending £38,000 a week on arranging cover for employees on sick leave. Up to one in nine of the 3,500 staff is off on any one day. Many work in the community as district nurses, psychiatric nurses and health visitors.

Sian Thomas, the trust's assistant chief executive, said "It is causing us obvious problems in arranging cover. We are having to spend around £2 million a year to make sure we can cope with the serious drop in numbers. That does not take into account the drop in activity in the work the staff carry out, or the drop in the numbers of people we can see. The real figure could be much higher.

"This issue is something which we must address immediately, so that we can reduce sickness and plough the £2 million into other areas of health care. We are working closely with staff side representatives to address the problem.

"We do recognise that not all problems are internal; staff may also have problems in their personal lives with which they may need help and support."

The Royal College of Nursing said that questions needed to be asked about why the sickness rate was so high. A spokeswoman said: "The staff are working in extremely pressurised conditions, and I know they feel terrible when they are forced to take sick days because they know they are just putting their colleagues under even more stress."

Joe Benton, the Labour MP whose Bootle constituency is served by the trust, said: "The very nature of these jobs makes them difficult and the staff must be helped to overcome difficulties."

Top judge criticises legislative 'torrent'

By Frances Gibb
Legal Correspondent

THE Government was criticised by a senior judge yesterday for the "torrent of legislation" it has inflicted in a short space of time on the criminal justice system.

Lord Justice Rose, a Court of Appeal judge, said he did not suggest that any of the many changes had been wrong or undesirable; that was a matter for the Government, he said. "Nor do I question the right of the Government to enact through Parliament as much legislation as it wishes."

Lord Justice Rose said he did, however, question the "wisdom of producing such a torrent of legislation in so short a timespan that the criminal justice system has difficulty in absorbing it".

The judge was speaking at a conference in London of the Criminal Justice Consultative Council, an umbrella body of which he is chairman. He went on to call for a "period of calm and consolidation" for those who were doing their best to make the system work. "A criminal justice system that is suffering from legislative indigestion is not likely best to serve the public in that fundamental aim of responding properly to the needs of victim and wrong-doer," he said.

Lord Justice Rose said that between 1925 and 1985 there had been six criminal justice acts, an average of one every ten years. Since 1986 there had been six more, one every 18 months, as well as legislation affecting children, drugs, road traffic and bail and three separate versions of police codes of practice.

Guy's reprieve likely as Bottomley is told to delay overhaul

By Jeremy Laurance, Health Services Correspondent

GUY'S HOSPITAL is likely to win a reprieve after a report yesterday recommended delaying the closure of its accident and emergency department until at least 1999.

Virginia Bottomley, the Health Secretary, is under pressure to agree to the delay, which would push the closure beyond the next election. Labour has pledged to impose a moratorium on further closures in London until another assessment has been made of the capital's health needs.

Guy's, one of the country's most important teaching hospitals, is threatened by plans to end its role as an acute general hospital and concentrate services at another London hospital, St Thomas's.

The change of heart by the Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham health commission comes after a three-month consultation in which 50 meetings were held and more than 2,500 written submissions received. More than a million people signed a petition objecting to the accident and emergency department's closure.

Martin Roberts, chief executive of the commission, said yesterday: "We remain convinced that the changes we have proposed are required to secure good quality services in the long term, but we now believe that the pace of change needs to be slowed to allow proper implementation."

The delayed timetable was necessary to reassure the public that alternative services were available but that would depend on Mrs Bottomley providing extra funds. "We recognise this may have implications for other parts of the NHS," he said.

Tessa Jowell, a member of the cross-party Save Guy's campaign, said: "We are absolutely thrilled. It means the health commission has taken seriously the business of public consultation and listened to the concern of local people."

Margaret Beckett, the Shadow Health Secretary, said: "The new timetable shows we were right to argue against the closure of Guy's accident and emergency department. It also shows we were right to call for a moratorium on all bed closures in London until the evidence on which they are based has been thoroughly re-examined."

The delay must be approved by the health commission's board on Tuesday before being sent to South Thames Regional Health Authority and from there to Mrs Bottomley for her decision. The timetable could prove attractive to ministers as a way of taking the heat out of the NHS debate in advance of the election.

A Health Department spokesman said it would be "over-optimistic and misleading" to say Guy's was reprieved. "I don't think you can take it as read that ministers will accept the health commission's recommendation."

Regimental picture falls victim to Ulster peace talks

By Paul Wilkinson

A PRINT of British soldiers patrolling the republican Ardoyne district of Belfast has been removed from public view in deference to the Ulster peace process.

The scene showing men from the Green Howards during a 1971 tour in Northern Ireland, in which they lost five soldiers, has been replaced by a modern illustration of the raising of the regiment in 1688.

The decision by civic leaders in Northallerton, North Yorkshire, which has strong links with the unit, provoked a sharp response from Lieutenant-Colonel Neil McIntosh, the regimental secretary. "If they have done this because of what is happening in Northern Ireland today then I think they are very wrong. We might just as well remove any picture showing scenes from the Second World War because the Germans and the Japanese are now our friends."

The print is taken from one of two paintings commissioned by the regiment from David Shepherd to mark the tour. The original is with the 1st Battalion in Germany. Copies were presented to towns in North Yorkshire, as the Green Howards draw much of their strength from the county and have the freedom of Northallerton.

There are no plans to take down the Richmond copy, which hangs in the council offices. Dennis Potts, 82, a councillor in the town for 49 years, said: "They would take it down over my dead body. I can only think Northallerton have had some kind of aberration."

Jane Harvey, the mayor of Northallerton, described it all as "a storm in a picture frame". She said "If we have offended anyone then I unreservedly apologise. We were offered the other picture and decided it was more suitable.

"It was in our minds that there are no longer any troops on the streets of Belfast and it seemed more appropriate to have a picture of the beginnings of the regiment in the town where its band played for the last time before disbandment."

Authors say Jesus was a Buddhist

By Ruth Gledhill, Religion Correspondent

JESUS was a Buddhist, according to a book by two German authors to be published later this month.

Elmar Gruber and Holger Kersten argue that the large amount of Buddhist philosophy in the New Testament suggests that Jesus might have been deeply influenced by Buddhism, and was even a Buddhist himself.

In The Original Jesus, they cite direct parallels, such as the Buddha's statement that: "Whosoever sees the Dharma, sees me," and Christ's statement: "He that seeth me seeth Him that sent me" (John xii, 45). "Buddhist elements in the New Testament are not the result of chance," they say. "They were disseminated by Jesus himself, so that it can be stated: Jesus was not a Christian, he was a Buddhist."

Mr Kersten, a specialist in religious history, and Dr Gruber, author of several books and scientific articles, say that Jesus was brought up by the Therapeutae, who they claim were missionaries from the Theravada school of Buddhism. They say his education was continued by the Essenoi and Mandaeans, who they say were also influenced by Buddhism.

The theory was dismissed as speculative by theologians. Steve Jenkins, spokesman for the Church of England, said: "If he started out as a Buddhist he didn't die as one. Anyway, he said he was Jewish."

The Right Rev Geoffrey Rowell, Bishop of Basingstoke and a leading church historian, said: "I think it is a highly speculative theory based on no substantial evidence. Scholars have speculated that there may be links between Buddhist and Christian monasticism but that comes about centuries after Jesus."

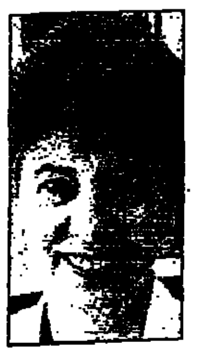
Lenten journey resounds to joy

Gillian Crow

"HAVE a joyful Lent!" Those words, spoken to me with exuberance recently by a fellow Orthodox, might seem a contradiction but they sum up so beautifully our Church's vision of the great fast. That vocabulary of joy, beauty, exhortation and vision is the substance of our Lenten pilgrimage towards Golgotha and the empty tomb.

My friend was about to set off on a journey to his native Greece. Lent is an inner journey towards God, beginning with a metanoia, or change of heart, a change of direction away from our accustomed self-centred preoccupations towards what should be our native home, the divine presence.



It is something of an eruption, like the spring shoots breaking out from the dark earth into the sunshine. It is the sudden realisation of better things, a brighter path to follow. The common perception of Lent, as a season of guilt and gloom, that speaks only in negative terms, is false. But the daringly positive action of turning Godwards in a sacrificial way has the sharpness of cautery.

To leave behind customary self-promotion or mere indifference and to set out on a path of self-examination leading to self-offering is, like any birth, painful, but it is also a moment of joy, the beginning of growth and the promise of fulfilment. In that pain of honest judgment we discover the wonderful picture of ourselves as we could be, as we will now struggle to be.

Lent is a letting go of worldly impedimenta, leaving us free to take up our cross and follow Christ. His invitation was to a dedication unto death, but a death bursting with new life at the core of each of us, so that we can learn to shine with the glory of the Holy Spirit. It is to be filled with the great joy of the apostles at the Ascension, as they returned to Jerusalem to begin their new lives as Christ's body on earth.

Unimpeded but not empty-handed, for we are commanded to take up the challenge of the cross. Our initial change of heart, the repentance born of seeing ourselves wanting in the divine light, calls us to determination and struggle to become as God intended us to be, a source of joy to him. Tradition has given us the two tools of prayer and fasting, hallowed by Christ himself, as our companions. They enable us to enter body and soul into a deepening communion with God. As we journey through Lent in this way, our sights must always be on our destination — Easter, the overflowing of joy of the resurrection, for which our Lenten struggle is foretaste. That can only be attained by way of Golgotha, our participation in Christ's death through our own death to all that is alien to the will of God.

This paradox of pain and joy has sometimes been called bright sadness or sad brightness, the realisation of humanity as we find ourselves and as we could be. But it is the joy which prevails, the paschal joy which is the essence of Christianity.

Have a joyful Lent! May we all take those beautiful words to heart.

Petrol firms dismiss green claim for new supermarket fuel

By Nick Nuttall, Environment Correspondent

MOTORISTS visiting a supermarket chain's filling stations today will be able to buy a new fuel described as the greenest in Britain. But petrol companies say Tesco's launch of low-benzene unleaded is merely a marketing ploy.

Clean-air campaigners say that the launch will confuse the petrol-buying public even more. It comes after rows over the green merits of leaded or unleaded petrol and the dangers of diesel fuels.

The new petrol contains 1 per cent benzene, a cancer-causing chemical. About 78 per cent of the benzene found in the air comes from vehicles and is linked with triggering smog on sunny days.

Aromatics, a group of chemicals also found in fuel, emit benzene when the petrol is burnt. Tesco claims its new fuel contains about 25 per cent aromatics, compared with more than 30 per cent in rival petrols. The fuel is also claimed to contain less sulphur, the substance linked with acid rain.

The company, which has produced a leaflet eulogising the new petrol's environmental credentials, plans to have the fuel at 222 forecourts by the end of the year. Dr Richard Pugh, Tesco's technical director, said that the petrol, which is being supplied from an undisclosed continental source, was "a major breakthrough" in improving air quality.

Shell and Jet say that low-benzene fuel has been available for some time and that their petrols already contain less than 1 per cent benzene. A spokesman for the UK Petroleum Industries Association also said that measuring the exact levels of substances found in fuels was fraught with difficulties.

The National Society for Clean Air, which represents councils, health bodies and air quality experts, fears the move will confuse and mislead the public. Tim Brown of the society said yesterday that the fuel, which costs 2p a litre more than standard unleaded, might reduce emissions but would play little or no role in improving air quality.

A spokesman for the RAC said that the supermarket's move should be applauded but that the benefits were far less than claimed.

The legal limit for benzene in unleaded fuel is 5 per cent. Most unleaded petrols range between 1.8 and 2.3 per cent. Shell said the average level of benzene in its fuel was less than 1 per cent last year and Jet claimed 0.5 per cent.

Oil companies, who believe the new fuel may be imported from Finland, want more details on how it has been refined. A petrol company source said: "It may be that more energy is needed to make this petrol, which means you get more emissions of gases such as carbon dioxide at the refineries."

MG fans make a beeline for new classic

The MGF 1.8i, to be unveiled at the Geneva Motor Show on Tuesday, will be in the showrooms this summer

THE MG, Britain's best-loved sports car, is back, with buyers clamouring for a model that will not be ready until the summer.

Demand is so great for the two-seater that Rover has set up a "hotline" to answer questions from those who want to order the car even though they have been unable to see pictures of it published today. What they will find is a modern evocation of the cars which became a legend, the octagonal badge famous the world over for the past 70 years.

The grille harks back to the MGB, the car regarded by enthusiasts as the last true MG, which was killed off by British Leyland in 1980. A succession of saloons carried the badge until Rover made a limited edition of the RV8 recently, based on design of the MGB. The RV8 had a powerful 3.5-litre engine and cost more than £26,000 — a price not in the spirit of the original "cheap and cheerful" MGs.

The MGF to be unveiled at the Geneva Motor Show on Tuesday will be priced so that ordinary motorists can enjoy the glamour of driving a convertible with a famous badge. There are two versions: the 1.8i at £16,000 and a more powerful 1.8i VVC at £18,500. The Rover-built K-series engine is mounted in the middle of the car, just behind the two seats and in front of a small boot. The dashboard will provoke comment among enthusiasts with its white speedometer and rev counter dials.

Rover is recruiting 300 new designers, with production scheduled to increase by over 50 per cent within five years. The £1.5 billion investment budget for that period will go up by 25 per cent to develop a range of new cars now that the company's 15-year co-operation with Honda of Japan is in effect over.

BMW is due to announce results this month which should show its new British acquisition made profits of £80 million last year. John Towers, Rover's chairman, said yesterday that Rover could be making 750,000 vehicles a year, split between the cars division and the Land Rover business, by the turn of the century, compared with 480,000 last year.

Loud snorer died after 'simple operation'

By A Staff Reporter

A LOUD snorer who had a simple operation after complaints from his wife developed a chest infection and other fatal complications, an inquest was told yesterday.

Simeon Leschnikoff, 56, a graphic designer of Otford, Kent, went into the Kent and Sussex Hospital, Tunbridge Wells, on October 17 last year for laser treatment to his palate. His wife Ann told Southwark Coroner's Court: "For the year or 18 months before he went to hospital, we were sleeping in separate rooms. It was causing quite a bit of ill-feeling."

Mr Leschnikoff's GP referred him to Graham Buckley, an otolaryngologist, who performed the surgery as well as electric shock treatment to nasal blood vessels.

After the surgery, Mr Leschnikoff complained of chest and stomach pains. After further surgery he died on December 4.

Mr Leschnikoff had a lung infection, which may have been present before surgery, and this developed into septicaemia, caused a build-up of gases and ruptured his bowel. Sir Montague Levine, the coroner, adjourned the inquest to hear other medical evidence.

Salesman fined over useless diet pills

By Paul Wilkinson

A MAN who once passed off tea as a slimming aid was fined £2,000 yesterday for another bogus claim.

Alan Hadfield claimed a pill he sold would speed up fat-burning no matter how much was eaten. But tests showed Thermoslim was 60 per cent inert filler material. The rest was dietary fibre, spearmint flavouring and traces of cellulose. The pills were made for 65p per pack by a Lancashire firm and sold for £25.

Ed Chicken, for the prosecution, told Harrogate magistrates that Hadfield had directed his tricks at vulnerable people. His claims for the pill were "totally untrue".

Hadfield, 47, of Audenshaw, Greater Manchester, admitted supplying products with a false trade description and incorrect labelling.

David Burton, for Hadfield, said he accepted that using the pills to burn fat was nonsense. He intended them to be used as part of a calorie-controlled diet and taking them would have a psychological effect. He said they made the body lose fluid and the cellulose acted as an appetite suppressant.

In October 1993 Hadfield appeared at the court to admit claiming slimming properties for a herbal tea.

'The country is crying out for wild animals to be treated with respect and compassion'

Anti-hunt MPs scent eventual victory in long campaign

BY ALICE THOMSON, POLITICAL REPORTER

THE DEBATE

MPs FROM all parties made impassioned speeches yesterday in support of a ban on fox-hunting, stag-hunting and hare-coursing, condemning the activities as "cruel and barbaric sports".

Although pro-hunting MPs had said that they would not vote against the second reading of the Labour MP John McFall's Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill, they turned out in force to defend "country pursuits" and made it clear that they are determined to block the Bill in committee.

By 9.30am the Chamber was packed. Mr McFall, opening the debate said: "I have no wish to interfere with reasonable and widely acceptable methods of pest control." But he said that the Bill would attack deliberate and unnecessary acts of brutality by the wilful use of dogs, which "involved hounding animals to exhaustion and death".

He branded fox-hunting a "gruesome sport" that caused the deaths each year of tens of thousands of the animals and an unknown number of terriers that battled underground with foxes. When asked by Tory MPs how he could know about the suffering when he had never seen any blood sports, he said that he was proud of the fact.

Rattling off statistics and surveys, Mr McFall said that even in the countryside 60 per cent of people wanted hunting banned and 80 per cent of county councils had banned hunting on their land. Farmers could not pretend that it was an effective method of pest control when some hunters' encouraged a high fox population by providing "cosy, artificial breeding dens" and feeding them with dead chickens and sheep. Less than 2 per cent of the lambs lost each year were killed by foxes.

Mr McFall dismissed claims that banning fox hunting would mean thousands of hounds having to be put down. They could be used instead for drag-hunting, in which the hounds follow the trail of a scented piece of cloth.

Condemning hare-coursing, Mr McFall said the police and the National Farmers' Union had reported cases of gangs of men raiding farms to course hares with greyhounds. The animals, he said, were in danger of dying out.

"It is clear the country is crying out for wild animals to be treated with respect and compassion. It is time for wild animals to be granted the basic protection to that provided 84 years ago to their domestic kin," he concluded.

The former cabinet minister Tom King immediately disagreed, basing his judgment on more than 25 years in his constituency of Bridgewater, where several hunts are established, and on his experience as a farmer. Mr King said he believed that Mr McFall's Bill had been written by the League against Cruel Sports and warned him that some of its supporters "have a rather different agenda to you".

People in the countryside who hunted were closer to the life-and-death cycle. They were not usually evil people although he conceded that there had been some "grim occasions" when stags had been hounded onto roofs and into the sea.

"Why is it that Exmoor has deer and Dartmoor has none? Can it just be that Dartmoor has no hunting, and no organisation, and no sympathy of the people of the moor who are actively concerned in the maintenance of the deer?" Calling for tolerance, Mr King said: "I am under no delusions that the people for whom I am advancing a case today are a minority. But it is their way of life, it is dear to them, it is part of the structure of the countryside in which they live."

Tony Benn (Lab, Chesterfield) pointed out that public opinion had changed rapidly in the three years since the last debate on hunting and that most children cared passionately about animals and the environment. Mr Benn told Mr King: "It isn't that anyone wants to stop you from enjoying yourself — drag-hunting must be just as much fun. The reality is that cruelty for fun is no longer acceptable to the overwhelming majority of people in this country."

> ❛Cruelty for fun is no longer acceptable to the majority of people❜

Hunt saboteurs were presented "as if they were hooligans", said Mr Benn. "But the saboteurs are there to protect animal life and change only happens when people do something. Remember votes for women, abolition of chimney boys and the end of apartheid. To present them as if this was a new creeping intolerance led by passion is incredible. The passion is in those who dress up in red coats and get on horses and kill animals."

Michael Colvin, (C, Romsey and Waterside) asked him: "Was it just pure coincidence that the day the poll tax rioters were burning down Trafalgar Square, not one single hunt in this country was sabotaged?"

Sir John Cope (C, Northavon), like many Tories, said that he supported the Bill's general cruelty provision for wild animals but not the ban on hunting. "I believe that, properly conducted, hunting is, by comparison with other methods, a humane way of killing foxes," he said. He told Mr Benn the animal rights movement was the "only single-issue campaign to have spawned a violent terrorist wing" and added: "I have no doubt that this attack on hunting, if it were ever successful, would lead straight on to attacks on shooting, fishing and other equestrian events. It could even lead to attacks on the keeping of pets."

But the anti-hunting campaigner Roger Gale (C, Thanet N) made it clear that many Tories were no longer part of the squirearchy and condemned the hunting, shooting and fishing tag. He highlighted the "long tortuous process" involved in digging out a fox gone to ground. He said the terriers sent into the hole very often dragged out the frightened animal by its muzzle before it was killed with a spade. The procedure was barbaric for the 20th century.

The Liberal Democrat benches were also divided. Sir David Steel (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale) said that he disapproved of hunting but he believed very firmly that it was a matter for the individual and not the law. A ban on hunting would be the "thin end of the wedge" and would mean considerable destruction to the rural economy.

However, Sir David eventually voted for the Bill because he said that he favoured the first clause, which stops unnecessary cruelty to hedgehogs and squirrels. He hopes that the anti-hunting measures will be dropped in committee.

Simon Hughes (Lib Dem, Southwark and Bermondsey) supported the Bill, emphasising that fox-hunting was not necessary to kill foxes for food or keep their numbers down.

Kevin McNamara (Lab, Hull N), who presented the last anti-hunting Bill, said that it was immoral to hunt animals for fun. Unlike Mr McFall, he had watched hare coursing and he described seeing a hare "with the hind legs in the mouth of one hound and the head in the mouth of another being pulled around, screaming. That is what you, who speak in favour of hunting here today, are defending."

The former Cabinet minister John Patten (C, Oxford W and Abingdon) said that he had no vested interest in blood sports but gave an eloquent speech warning the House to tread carefully. "We should strongly avoid narrow-minded intolerance which could forced people unnecessarily into becoming criminals and outcasts. We should resist the temptation to insist everyone must conform to what a majority opinion poll says — simply because a majority opinion poll may have a particular view on one particular day," he said.

John Major had already made it clear that he did not intend to support the measure, although he has never supported blood sports.

Supporters of the Bill bringing their message to Westminster by lorry and barge yesterday

The Home Office minister Nicholas Baker, speaking for the Government, said that it had traditionally adopted a position of neutrality towards all matters concerning field sports. But the Government believed the Bill would impose "onerous" responsibilities on the rural communities making it difficult to control pests.

For the Opposition, Elliot Morley said that Labour had already promised a free vote on the issue and would introduce the necessary legislation if it was approved. "The pro-blood sports lobby in this House no longer has a majority to defeat a measure like this and what they don't want to do is demonstrate their weakness. If this Bill goes through to a second reading it will be the first time this House has approved a measure to ban hunting of this type. It will be a clear and unequivocal signal that this House wants to see the end of hunting and other acts of cruelty to wild mammals," he said.

"In the not too distant future, people will look back with amazement that this House has allowed people to inflict deliberate cruelty and stress on wild animals in the name of entertainment in the latter part of the 20th century."

The Whipless Tory Euro-rebel Nicholas Budgen (Wolverhampton SW) said that he had hunted foxes all his life even though he knew that some of his constituents disapproved of the sport. His complaint was that the Bill could end up like the Dangerous Dogs Act, done because of public pressure rather than good common sense.

> ❛A ban on hunting would be the thin end of the wedge❜

Lawrence Cunliffe (Lab, Leigh) said he had been forced to hunt and set snares as a child with his grandfather but the memories of being forced to bludgeon baby weasels to death had haunted him for 50 years. "I can still hear the echoes of those penetrative shrills as those animals died," he said.

Nigel Forman (C, Carshalton and Wallington) said he would back the second reading of the Bill because he believed that the measure needed closer examination. But he added: "I suspect the real objective of many proponents of this legislation is first to outlaw hunting and then probably to go on to have a go at shooting and fishing. I wonder, as a layman, where it will all end."

Tony Banks (Lab, Newham NW) made numerous interventions in defence of the Bill and promised that opponents of fox-hunting would never give up. "Our determination is absolute," he said.

The anti-hunt MPs later refused to concede that it would be a hollow victory if the Bill was blocked in committee, saying that they regarded success in the vote as the beginning for the end of hunting and a signal that legislation would eventually be carried.

THE MPS WHO VOTED FOR THE BILL

The Conservative MPs who voted for the second reading of the Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill were:

David Amess (Basildon), David Atkinson (Bournemouth E), Sir Andrew Bowden (Brighton Kemptown), Sir Graham Bright (Luton S), Stephen Day (Cheadle), Niranjan Deva (Brentford and Isleworth), Tim Devlin (Stockton S), Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington), Hugh Dykes (Harrow E), David Evennett (Erith and Crayford), Nigel Forman (Carshalton and Wallington), Roger Gale (Thanet N), Peter Griffiths (Portsmouth N), Jerry Hayes (Harlow), Sir Terence Higgins (Worthing), Robert G Hughes (Harrow W), John Horam (Orpington), Gwilym Jones (Cardiff N), Greg Knight (Derby N), Jim Lester (Broxtowe), Sir Peter Lloyd (Fareham), Piers Merchant (Beckenham), Sir Fergus Montgomery (Altrincham and Sale), Steven Norris (Epping Forest), Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley), Dr Robert Spink (Castle Point), David Sumberg (Bury S), Sir Teddy Taylor (Southend E), Cyril Townsend (Bexleyheath), John Ward (Poole)

LABOUR:

Country sports lovers rally in protest

BY LIN JENKINS

TENS of thousands of supporters of country sports gathered at rallies throughout Britain yesterday to send a clear message to Parliament not to introduce legislation to curb their activities.

The protest was timed to coincide with the Commons vote on John McFall's Bill.

It marked the first time that disparate rural groups, not normally given to self-promotion, joined forces to plead to be allowed to continue to be the custodians of the countryside. They argued that animal rights activists, whether misguided or malicious, would if successful in their aims harm tradition, the rural economy and the eco-system as well as infringing on personal liberty.

At the South of England showground at Ardingly, West Sussex, where about 8,000 people gathered, Richard Course, a former chairman and executive director of the League Against Cruel Sports for 11 years, argued against a ban.

The Enfield Labour councillor, addressing a constituency which is not his natural one, said it was time somebody addressed the argument from the fox's point of view. While dogs killed foxes instantly, those caught in snares suffered, as did those wounded with pellets, who might take days or even weeks to die.

He said that while he did not support foxhunting, the Bill, which was drafted by the League Against Cruel Sports, was being promoted by "calculating hypocrites who dressed it up as animal welfare". If people wanted to simply get at the aristocracy, there were better ways, he said.

Sir Stephen Hastings, an MP for 23 years and former chairman of the British Field Sports Society (BFSS), told the gathering that country people were difficult to organise but there was now a "mass resistance to this preaching, bullying and harassment."

Nicholas Kester, who held a hooded lanner falcon, principally flown at partridge but sometimes at vermin quarry such as magpies, argued that country sports people were conservationists. He said the goshawk had been reintroduced simply because of falconry. "We find it extraordinary that a Bill should be introduced to ban coursing with hare, but permit us to fly hawks at hare. We are here in support because we know we would be next."

Farmers, the BFSS, the British Association of Shooting and Conservation, the Salmon and Trout Association, the Guardians of Game Fishing, the British Falconers Club, the National Coursing Club, landowners and local hunts joined forces in mounting the nine rallies across the country.

The campaign, which concedes it was slow to respond to growing public support for the anti-hunting argument, has enlisted celebrities such as Ian Botham, Jimmy Hill and Chay Blyth to their cause in order to attract more publicity.

But yesterday's rallies were designed for the ordinary country sportsmen. John Barrow, director of the Handicapped Anglers Trust, which provides nearly 50 specially designed boats enabling over 9,000 handicapped people a year the opportunity to fish, said the Bill would be a threat to all rural sports.

Calls mount for Nato chief to quit as Belgian bribes scandal taints Atlantic alliance

Claes retreat brings respite

BRUSSELS FILE

by GEORGE BROCK

FEW JOURNEYS can have come as such a relief to a politician in need of a change of scene as Willy Claes's flight to Canada last Wednesday. He crossed the Atlantic in a trip that had been scheduled for some time to discuss such deeply serious matters as the Nato budget. Behind him, the Secretary-General left an alliance headquarters full of people laying bets on how long he can keep his job.

Mr Claes has given his name to "Willygate", the long-running corruption investigation which used to be known to Belgians as the Agusta scandal, after the Italian helicopter firm alleged to have paid bribes to Belgian politicians. Now, police interest in Mr Claes has turned what had been a complicated imbroglio understood by a handful of experts into an international embarrassment for Belgium.

Nato diplomats mutter privately that an Atlantic alliance struggling to make sense of its new relationship with Eastern Europe and a troubled Russia cannot afford to have its top civilian official distracted by trying to clear his name. Belgian newspapers plead with Mr Claes to resign for the sake of his country and although America and Germany have made supportive noises, Dutch ministers have said openly that his situation is scarcely tenable.

Why should the Dutch be so quick to say the unthinkable? Bets are being laid on who might succeed Mr Claes should he be forced to step aside. A shortlist could be quickly assembled from the candidates disappointed last summer. The Dutch Government then wanted Hans van den Broek, currently its European Commissioner, to have the job and was already aggrieved because Ruud Lubbers, a former Prime Minister, had not been made President of the Commission.

The Americans asked Douglas Hurd if he were interested, but he was not: Malcolm Rifkind's name was briefly floated.

The German Government, which objected to Mr van den Broek last time, is privately hinting that he would be an acceptable candidate if a vacancy were to occur now. Mr van den Broek would thus be a powerful candidate and, if he left the European Commission, his job looking after European Union relations with Eastern Europe — feverishly coveted by Sir Leon Brittan — might once again be up for grabs. Could Sir Leon's heart be beating a little faster this weekend?

Willy Claes, who flew to Canada amid a debate over a possible successor

Camera captures the Gaullist touch

EUROPEAN Union ministers have been allowing television cameras into the occasional "discussion". At a Finance Ministers' meeting recently, the cameras revealed the scorn with which French officials sometimes treat their ministers. Edmond Alpandéry, the minister, was in the chair with Pierre de Boissieu, the French Ambassador to Brussels, beside him. M de Boissieu is De Gaulle's great nephew and behaves like it. The camera caught the minister scrabbling among his papers for his script. M de Boissieu told him in no uncertain terms how to find it and rapped imperiously on the paper in the manner of an irritated schoolmaster. Seconds later, both men reverted to their public roles: the minister in charge and the envoy in respectful silence.

Federalism strains the ties that bind

THOSE who lead British MEPs in the European Parliament live with the constant nightmare that some of them will do or say something that embarrasses the party's leadership in Britain. In both the Conservative and Labour parties, the ties that bind the MEPs to London will be strained this month.

Tony Blair goes to Barcelona next week to meet fellow European socialists. The 1996 conference on the Maastricht Treaty is on the menu and by the end of the month, Socialist MEPs are supposed to agree what they want from it. They began with a paper written by Elisabeth Guigou, queen of the French Euro-Socialists, who wants a large push towards federalism. Pauline Green, a former policewoman from London who leads the Parliament's Socialist bloc, has rewritten Mme Guigou's prescriptions almost out of existence.

Tories from Westminster as well as Strasbourg are to mingle with their continental equivalents in Brussels later in the month. Wilfried Martens, the Belgian Christian Democrat in charge, is drafting federalist language designed to embarrass the British. The Tories have deployed Sir Geoffrey Pattie, a former minister, to water down the text. Stand by for tears before bedtime.

Mafia war fears grow after news of Andreotti trial

FROM PHILIP WILLAN IN ROME

ITALIANS were yesterday digesting the momentous decision to send Giulio Andreotti, Italy's most influential post-war politician, for trial in Palermo on charges of having belonged to the Cosa Nostra.

Thursday's ruling by Judge Agostino Gristina came as a severe blow to the man who was seven times Prime Minister and 20 times a minister in a political career spanning half a century. It coincided with what investigators fear could be the beginning of a new Mafia war: two young men were shot dead in Palermo on Thursday and a third man was gunned down in a builder's yard in the same city yesterday.

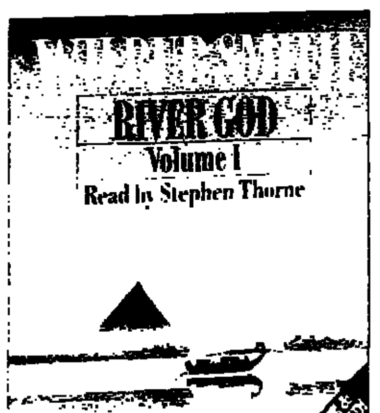
Television news programmes showed footage of one victim, Salvatore Vitale, 39, as his body was being loaded into a coffin in the violent, Mafia-dominated quarter of Brancaccio. "It's a Mafia war," said Leoluca Orlando, the Mayor of Palermo. "A period has begun in which the Mafia system of power appears to be seeking new military bosses and new political and financial allies in *response to the growing suc*cesses of the state in the battle against organised crime."

Signor Andreotti admitted in a television interview yesterday that he was disappointed the preliminary hearing had not gone in his favour. "But when I saw the files, already a lorry-load, grow week by week, I realised that it was becoming more difficult technically for things to be settled," he said. "Here, there is an equation: Christian Democrats, or part of the Christian Democrat Party, equals Mafia. The final prosecution case is that the guilty party is my political faction, which is a very curious affirmation."

Enzo Biagi, a columnist, wrote in a front-page editorial for Corriere della Sera: "If he *manages to prove his inno*cence we will have another martyr, because he has lived through terrible days, which have weighed in a devastating manner on his family. If he is shown to be guilty, it will mean that as well as being governed by many thieves, we were also governed by the accomplices or the instigators of assassins." Signor Biagi said the Andreotti trial amounted to the trial of Italy: "We are all in it, as witnesses or as unwilling accomplices."

Meanwhile, a Senate vote on an emergency budget, expected yesterday, was postponed until Tuesday to allow more debate.

THE TIMES Audio books for 20p



Buy an audio book from a range of 200 Audio Book Collection titles and you could buy a second for the price of Britain's leading quality newspaper.

Among the many unabridged titles are the two volumes of River God by Wilbur Smith (ABC 919 and 920 - 10 cassettes each). Set in an ancient Egypt weakened by war and greed, the books tell the story of Taita, a eunuch slave whose dream is to restore the lost power and majesty of the Pharaohs. Meticulously researched, they are filled with detail and evoke the magnificence of the Nile kingdom.

Buy one of the volumes of River God for £16.95 and for 20p you could hear Andrew Sachs read A Handful Of Dust by Evelyn Waugh (SAB 006 - £14.95 - 8 cassettes). This chronicles the affair between Lady Brenda Last, who has become bored with country life in her husband's Victorian Gothic mansion, and a totally worthless young man. What starts as a fashionable diversion turns into a series of calamities. Waugh declines to make any moral points in this tale of a broken marriage and carefully chronicles the comic and ridiculous aspects of human misfortune.

To take advantage of this offer, collect eight of the tokens which are appearing each day and complete the application form which appeared in Tuesday's paper. When you buy one of the 200 titles you will be entitled to a second book containing eight tapes or less for only 20p. Only one 20p book per household may be ordered. ABBEY NATIONAL
The habit of a lifetime

W44

The monthly repayment quoted above represents interest only payments (net of tax relief) on an endowment mortgage based on a 5.35% discount (until 31.5.96) when compared to the standard variable rate of 8.34% 8.7% APR. All rates quoted are available where the deposit is at least 25%. All discounts depend on the size of the deposit and the term of the discount. These offers are subject to availability and may be withdrawn at any time. The £820 saving (Mortgage Bonus) is based on a homeowner with an existing Abbey National mortgage buying their next home with a variable rate mortgage and consists of a valuation of up to £320 and up to £500 towards legal fees (other borrowers may claim up to £300 towards legal fees). Typical example for a 4.85% discount off our normal variable rate until 31.5.96 including the Mortgage Bonus: a couple (male and female), who currently do not have a mortgage with Abbey National, non smokers, aged 29, applying for an endowment mortgage of £40,000 on a purchase price of £60,000, secured over 25 years. 300 monthly interest payments of £98.88 net of tax relief plus the final repayment of £40,000 capital. 300 monthly endowment premiums of £56.10. Total amount payable £75,018.19 includes £50 deeds handling fee charged on redemption and accrued interest of £69.19 assuming completion on 15.5.95. Example calculated at 3.49% for the full mortgage term 3.5% APR. No account has been taken of any change of interest rates. In the example, from 1.6.96 our normal variable rate (or if applicable our rate for higher value mortgages) will apply which may result in an increase in the monthly repayments. All APRs are typical and variable. The application deadline for the Home Buyers and the Mortgage Bonus packages is 31.5.95. Completion must take place by 4.11.95. Proof of paid legal fees must be submitted by 30.11.95 to claim the Mortgage Bonus. A charge equivalent to the discount received will be made if the mortgage is redeemed, converted from variable rate terms or a capital repayment made before 31.5.98 (for packages discounted until 31.5.96 and 31.5.98) or 31.5.2000 (for packages discounted until 31.5.2000). In addition a charge equivalent to the Mortgage Bonus will be made if the mortgage is redeemed before 31.5.95. See leaflet for details. Mortgages require a charge on the property and in the case of an endowment mortgage an endowment/life policy for the amount of the advance and a charge over the policy. All loans subject to status and valuation and are not available to persons under 18 years. A High Loan To Value Fee will also be required if the loan exceeds 75%*. We require the property to be insured. If not insured through us, we reserve the right to charge an administration fee of £25. *As a percentage of the purchase price or valuation, whichever is the lower. Impoverished African democrats present challenge to social summit

From Eve-Ann Prentice
in Bamako

PRESIDENT KONARÉ of Mali, leader of one of the poorest countries on earth, is about to take on the world's richest and most powerful nations.

He seems undaunted by the prospect of tackling leaders such as President Mitterrand of France and President Yeltsin of Russia in Copenhagen at the United Nations social development summit on Monday. One hundred and twenty world leaders assembling in Denmark have given themselves the well meaning, but probably hopeless, mission of "eradicating poverty". As far as President Alpha — as he is known locally — is concerned, there is a danger that the summit will turn into yet another UN talking shop, leaving the real problems of African economic development and democracy unaddressed.

Speaking at his presidential palace high on a hill overlooking the Malian capital, Bamako, the President said he had almost refused to go to "another meeting where people will just talk". His misgivings may be well placed. Britain is not sending the Prime Minister or the Foreign Secretary: Baroness Chalker of Wallasey, the Minister for Overseas Development, will be the British representative. Washington is sending Vice-President Al Gore and Hillary Clinton, the President's wife. The official aim of the UN social summit is to "launch a co-ordinated attack on three profound social problems that imperil the peace and security of every nation: poverty, unemployment and social disintegration".

The UN General Assembly has even designated next year the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty. Yet a footnote to a UN announcement of next week's summit, beneath the confident headline "Historic Pact on Human Needs offered in Copenhagen" indicates why the summit's lofty aims are unlikely to be realised. "Disagreements remain in several key areas. The problems involve such questions as how to finance increased spending for social development, especially at a time of economic austerity in many donor countries."

Mali is a perfect example of the sort of country the summit is ostensibly being held to help — desperately poor but with a three-year-old democracy struggling to beat internal unrest. It needs all the help it can get, but knows it is unlikely to receive it.

The economic indicators can only give a glimmer of the human misery they represent for Mali's nine million citizens: a mere 5 per cent have access to electricity; fewer than a fifth of children go to primary school; and most scrape by on just over £200 a year. Most adult Malians, 65 per cent, cannot read or write. President Konaré, who came to power in June 1992 after the fall of the repressive military regime of Moussa Traoré, spoke amid 1960s decor in his palace, complete with cheap ochre-coloured sofas. "I don't want to beg or demand a redistribution in the world's wealth," he said, outlining the speech he will deliver in Copenhagen. "I refuse to accept that one million children in my country cannot read or write — and this five years before the end of the century. I refuse to accept that thousands of children are dying in my country for the want of cheap medicines."

Leaders of the poorest nations know they are unlikely to achieve any great breakthrough in Copenhagen but hope it will be an important forum for them to make their voices heard. They point out that even the richest countries are affected when poverty leads to unrest, citing Somalia and Rwanda as prime examples.

Danish sex trade ready to cash in on UN

Copenhagen: The Danish sex trade is confident that some of the many visitors to the United Nations Social Development summit here will use its facilities (Christopher Follett writes). Strip clubs and escort agencies are extending their hours and hiring more girls to cope with the expected demand.

Escort agencies offering call girls plan to double their staff to 4,000 and strip clubs will open round the clock. "We have called in extra performers from Thailand, Eastern Europe and Britain. We are also advertising for more Danish girls," Marianne Gro, of the Wonder Bar strip club, said.

Distraught Russians grieve for shot TV presenter

From Richard Beeston in Moscow

RUSSIAN politicians scrambled yesterday to make capital out of the murder of a popular television host, whose assassination this week has triggered an unprecedented wave of national remorse and soul-searching.

Thousands of Russians, some in tears, others simply looking distraught and shocked, turned out at the grim Soviet-era state television building in Moscow to lay flowers and pay their last respects to Vladislav Listyev, one of the country's best loved television personalities.

In numerical terms and in the very visible outpouring of grief at memorial services and vigils held outside the shot television personality's office and home, his death seemed to have shaken the nation more forcefully than the 11-week conflict in Chechenia. Muscovites said that they had not seen so many mourners since Andrei Sakharov, the dissident figure, died five years ago.

Police released two identikit pictures of the murder suspects, who they believed are professional hit men hired by the mafia. They ambushed Listyev as he walked up the stairwell to his flat in central Moscow on Wednesday night, shooting him twice and taking his briefcase, but leaving his wallet containing £937. It is widely assumed he was murdered because of his reforms to the state-owned television network, which involved cutting out advertising middlemen, whose sale of air time was worth hundreds of millions a year.

The killing appears to have triggered something of an identity crisis among a generation of young, self-assured and professional Russians who over the past five years have come to dominate Russia's flourishing private sector, particularly in the media.

For them Listyev's success as a television presenter symbolised that the post-communist generation of Russians could break with their Soviet past and begin to build a country where individual tal*ent is* rewarded. "The shot aimed at Vladislav Listyev was a shot at our freedom and civil dignity … To me, he represented the symbol of new, honest and uncompromising journalism," Anatoli Chubais, the reforming Deputy Prime Minister, said. "This is precisely what certain forces in our society that killed the talented journalist do not want and fear."

The murder has attracted massive public attention, with normal television programming interrupted to discuss the killing and newspapers devoting their black-bordered front pages to the implications of the assassination.

Not surprisingly politicians have been quick to capitalise on the issue, and yesterday Vladimir Zhirinovsky, the ultra-nationalist leader, said that the assassination was further proof that President Yeltsin and the rest of the political establishment had to go. "We demand that the political authorities in Russia resign," said the leader of the extremist Liberal Democratic Party. "The authorities are incompetent, both in the White House (the Prime Minister's office) and the Kremlin."

Grigori Yavlinksy, the leader of the reformist Yabloko movement, said that the murder was a turning point for Russia, which had finally to tackle its greatest threat. "Either the country will conquer terror, or terror will conquer the country," he said.

However, many liberals fear that the assassination will simply assist the cause of reactionary political forces who could use the pretext of crime fighting to reimpose a police state. The daily Nezavisimaya Gazeta likened the murder to the 1934 assassination of Sergei Kirov, a senior Communist Party official, whose killing gave Stalin the pretext to launch the Great Terror.

Nikolai Svanidze, a television director, issued a warning that Russia's fledgling democracy was under threat. "There will be elections and people will follow the first bastard to say 'I will restore order, I will defend you'. And we, like a flock of scared sheep, will choose the wolf."

☐ Berlin: A Russian businessman was killed by an unidentified gunman in Berlin. Police suspected the Russian mafia was behind the killing of Belorussia-born Petr Leonchikov, 27. He was shot in the head and chest while he was parking his Mercedes in the prosperous Grunewald district. (AFP)

Greece lifts 20-year veto to secure EU deal with Turkey

By Our Foreign Staff

GREECE announced yesterday that it had lifted its veto on a customs union between the European Union and Turkey after securing all points it considered important.

The confirmation came as EU officials in Brussels struck a provisional deal, breaking more than 20 years of deadlock over the customs union and setting a date for starting membership talks with Cyprus.

Evangelos Venizelos, spokesman for the Greek Government, said in Athens that Greece was ready to accept the text and the common position on the customs union. "Greece is ready to accept it." Mr Venizelos said. "It considers the negotiations especially successful, securing all of the important points." He noted that the council of permanent representatives and the 15 member-states of the EU had made a commitment to start EU-Cyprus talks six months after an intergovernmental meeting that is planned for next year.

Greece has been using its power of veto over the customs union with Turkey as a lever to force the pace on opening EU accession negotiations with the divided island. "Our country has in its hand a specific trade off for Cyprus," Mr Venizelos said.

A customs union with Turkey would open up trade in a wide range of goods and services, unblock £596 million of aid for the country and tie it closely to Western Europe.

EU nations are also interested in access to Turkey's market of 60 million people and see Turkey as an important economic bridge to the Middle East and former Soviet republic in Central Asia.

The deal should be concluded by Monday. Turkish diplomats said Tansu Ciller, the Turkish Prime Minister, was likely fly to Brussels to seal the agreement.

If the agreement goes ahead as planned, the customs union will come into force on January 1 next year. The EU was eager to clinch the deal to strengthen Turkey's links with Europe at a time of growing Western concern about the influence of Islamic fundamentalism there and in other Mediterranean nations.

Fugitive's papers forged

Madrid: A political storm was raging in Spain yesterday after the discovery that the extradition papers allegedly issued by the Government of Laos to hand over Spain's most wanted fugitive were forged (Edward Owen writes). Juan Roldán, 51, the former head of the Civil Guard who absconded ten months ago with an estimated £30 million, has been in prison since Spanish police brought him back to Spain last Tuesday.

Some lawyers believe he could be released if he has been detained illegally. Ana Ferrer, the investigating judge, has laid six charges against Señor Roldan for illegally obtaining funds during his six years as head of Spain's top security force.

Alan Bond to stand trial

Perth: Alan Bond, the Australian businessman, has been ordered to stand trial on fraud charges relating to the sale of a painting, Manet's La Promenade. The Australian Securities Commission charged Mr Bond in 1993 with four counts of fraud, but the case was delayed when Mr Bond's lawyers argued that he suffered depression, brain damage and memory loss, and by unsuccessful court appeals. (Reuter)

Salt Lake City: Howard W. Hunter, 14th leader of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or the Mormons, died yesterday, nine months after taking office. He was 87. The church said in January that he had prostate cancer that had spread to his bones. Gordon B. Hinckley, 84, is expected to succeed him. (AP)

Verdict awaited on Lyons mayor

Lyons: The corruption trial of Michel Noir, Mayor of Lyons, and Pierre Botton, his financier son-in-law, ended here yesterday with the judge announcing that he would deliver his verdict on April 20. The state wants an 18-month suspended prison sentence and a five-year ban on holding public office for M Noir. (Reuter)

Ardour cooled

Cairo: An accountant has been jailed for a month for accosting a woman out with her fiancé in a Cairo street and telling her: "Oh, you are so beautiful and delicious. You are much better looking than him." He was convicted of "offending a woman's modesty in a public place". (AFP)

Right's crusader strikes a nerve across France

From Charles Bremner in Caen

THE refreshing thing about Philippe de Villiers, presidential candidate and champion of France's Europhobic Right, is his disregard for the taboos that shroud the civil war in his own political camp.

"Balladur has had it. It's clear and irreversible. He's in a tailspin and the worst is to come." The line, uttered with a chuckle 15,000ft over Normandy, might sound like saloon bar punditry, but it carries weight coming from a man who rates at between 8 and 10 per cent in the polls. That figure makes Viscount Philippe Jolis de Villiers de Saintignon, 45, the provocateur of the middle classes, a factor to be reckoned with by Edouard Balladur and Jacques Chirac, the Gaullist front-runners fighting to succeed President Mitterrand.

Once dismissed as a reac*tionary gadfly, M de Villiers* has been taken seriously since he teamed up with Sir James Goldsmith and Judge Thierry Jean-Pierre, the scourge of political crooks, and won 12 per cent of the French seats in the European Parliament.

A junior minister in the last Chirac-Balladur Government, M de Villiers is revelling in his role of prophet and crusading troublemaker. "Balladur was far out of his depth," he says on the flight to Caen. "He never understood what Chirac knows — that everything in politics comes down to a rapport de force."

The grin flashes again as he muses on the alarm among ministers who deserted the party leader to back the Prime Minister. "All those people who betrayed Chirac are looking at Balladur and saying: 'It wasn't worth betraying Chirac for that.'" M de Villiers says he likes M Chirac personally, but this does not stop him calling him one of the "geron*tocracy". This tribe of elders,* he says, governs France like a corrupt club while throwing away national sovereignty to the bankers of Frankfurt.

He is appalled, he says, by the failure of the Gaullists and Lionel Jospin, the Socialist candidate, to tell the truth on Europe. They all want a federal superstate. Voicing an idea absent from mainstream debate in France, he warns: "Monetary union implies the transfer of sovereignty — in other words, our liberty."

Much of his thinking echoes Tory Eurosceptics and American Republicans. He rails against waste and wants to sack thousands of civil servants; he has a scheme for phasing out income tax; he wants curbs on immigration and rejection of "the sinister Schengen Treaty" on open European frontiers. He opposes abortion, favours the guillotine, and wants a return to family and community values. He differs from the "Anglo-Saxons", however, in opposing free trade. Echoing Sir James, he says Europe is doomed without protection from foreign labour. He later rouses a cheer from an *other*wise docile audience in Caen when he notes that "Sixty Filipinos cost the same as one Calvados worker."

His thinking has struck a nerve across France, making him an idol among older, Catholic traditionalists who took a shine to the boyish aristocrat when he campaigned in the Maastricht referendum in 1992. It has also cast him and his Movement for France beyond the pale for an establishment which sees him as a dangerous demagogue. His enemies call him a cynic with a killer instinct and mutter that his private life — he is married with seven children — conflicts with his gospel of family values. He is a blast from France's prerevolutionary past, they say, and his arguments against immigration make him a polite version of the Jean-Marie Le Pen and his National Front.

M de Villiers is angered by the comparison and experts say his support comes not, as M Le Pen's, from the working class fringes, but from disaffected Gaullist and centre-right supporters who blame Europe and the Americans for France's social malaise and high unemployment. Because of this, M de Villiers could end up a kingmaker if the two Gaullists win through to the second round run-off of the election on May 7.

De Villiers, once dismissed as a reactionary gadfly

Israel warns US of 'terrible price' if Jordan aid cut

FROM CHRISTOPHER WALKER IN JERUSALEM AND TOM RHODES IN WASHINGTON

ANGERED by the threat of deep cuts in promised American aid to Jordan, Yossi Beilin, Israel's Deputy Foreign Minister, told the United States yesterday that it could pay "a terrible price" if it did not spend money to help countries involved in the Middle East peace process.

His comments came after telephone calls from President Clinton to Yitzhak Rabin, the Prime Minister of Israel, and King Husain of Jordan following a Republican-dominated congressional subcommittee vote to cut US debt forgiveness to Jordan from $275 million (£171 million) this budget year to $50 million.

The White House meanwhile increased its pressure on Republicans to reverse their decision to cut the aid. After President Clinton issued a general warning against America's withdrawal from global affairs as the centrepiece of an important foreign policy speech, the Administration seized on the congressional decision as a prime example of a drift towards isolationism.

Mike McCurry, the White House Press Secretary, said that the consequences of such an action could result in renewed conflict between Israel and Jordan. "If we get into a situation where the United States, having made commitments to the Middle East peace process, is suddenly reneging on those commitments, it could be harmful.

"How much more expensive would it be to prepare for war than to deepen and nurture the bonds of peace that are now developing between Israel and Israel's neighbours?"

In Israel, Mr Beilin, refelecting concern in the Cabinet that the new American isolationism will put paid to any hopes that Syria can be persuaded to join the peace process, said: "There is a sort of lack of understanding regarding the terrible price, not only in money, that the United States could pay if, God forbid, there is another war in the region or in other regions, compared to the small sums being talked about for creating a better atmosphere."

The bizarre sight of Israel pleading for financial benefits for Jordan, its enemy for 46 years, resulted from the conviction among Israeli ministers that the original Washington promise to erase the debt was one of the main reasons why King Husain showed such determination to ignore Islamic opposition and sign the peace treaty last year.

Israel Radio reported that Mr Clinton promised the Jordanian leader that American economic support for his kingdom would continue despite the congessional decison. Earlier, he told Mr Rabin that he would work with Senate moderates to block the cut if it passed the House of Representatives.

Mr McCurry said that Mr Rabin was "upset and somewhat alarmed" by the congressional decision to renege on promises to Jordan. He added that Mr Rabin had emphasised that it was in Israel's strategic interest "to see the benefits of peace accrue to the citizens of Jordan". In response, "the President told the Prime Minister in candour that we face a very tough audience now on Capitol Hill".

The Republicans have defended their efforts to cut aid as a reponsible attempt to fill the vacuum left by an indecisive Administration.

In keeping with custom, Muslims were enjoined to set aside three kilograms of staple food, or its value, to give to the poor after fasting ended. Friday was declared Eid ul-Fitr after an imam announced the sighting of the Id moon. "May this festival strengthen mutual goodwill and inspire each one of us to follow the path of universal brotherhood," President Sharma said in a message.

Caution dominates Peking congress

FROM JAMES PRINGLE IN PEKING

AS UNCERTAINTY hangs over China, the annual session of the National People's Congress starts tomorrow, aiming to plot a tortuous path through the year ahead.

The 12 months may well see the demise of Deng Xiaoping, the paramount leader, and the emergence of a new leadership less committed to his reformist vision. Moreover, China has been mired in an intellectual copyright piracy feud with America and been involved with aggressive moves against neighbours in the South China Sea.

However, the parliamentary session is unlikely to tackle any of these problems head-on. "Don't expect any serious new initiatives at this time," one Western diplomat said yesterday. "With the health of Mr Deng in the balance, this is not the time for the congress to strike out in new directions. Everyone will be very cautious."

Despite a facade of unity, factions are quietly manoeuvring behind the scenes to succeed Mr Deng and his entourage. "It's a jostling for position rather than an overt power struggle," another envoy here said. "We won't see how fragile the situation is until Mr Deng goes."

The congress used to be called a rubber stamp parliament, approving decisions handed down by the Chinese Communist Party. In the past few years, it has shown a willingness to debate issues seriously, at least behind closed doors.

Diplomats believe that the most serious internal issue that will be tackled during the 14 days of deliberations — to be chaired by Qiao Shi, a Politburo member with close links to China's security apparatus but who nevertheless is considered a political liberal — will be the problem of corruption. Recent attacks on corrupt party officials have been made by Li Peng, the Prime Minister, and by Jiang Zemin, the party chief who is also Mr Deng's designated successor. Mr Jiang said this week that rampant corruption infecting government and party cadres could result in the party being swept from power.

Mrs Mandela rallies the poor

FROM MICHAEL HAMLYN IN JOHANNESBURG

WINNIE MANDELA yesterday vowed to fight the "charlatans and cowards" who she said were pursuing a vendetta against herself and other populist leaders of the African National Congress.

Mrs Mandela toured the poverty-stricken black township of Tembisa, east of Johannesburg, revelling in the mass support of her main constituency, the poor and the dispossessed.

She visited a number of houses, including one belonging to a staunch supporter who had been mysteriously shot dead overnight. Breaking her silence for the first time since she returned to South Africa to face accusations of corruption, she issued a statement through her lawyers, saying that "forces of reaction" were attacking her and other leaders.

"The fight against those who are perceived to be pillars of ANC mass support has now become obvious and transparent," she said. "In defence of the aspirations of my people, I am left with no choice but to take the challenge head on."

Earlier, Mrs Mandela, dressed in a blue silk boubou, a West African-style toga, appeared in court in Johannesburg at the start of the legal proceedings. She is trying to have a warrant which allowed police to search her Soweto house overturned. The hearing was adjourned until March 14.

☐ Ouagadougou: The elite of Burkina Faso are furious at Mrs Mandela for failing to attend a cocktail party in her honour (Our Diplomatic Correspondent writes).

Mrs Mandela was in Ouagadougou, the capital, earlier this week to visit the Pan African Film Festival in her capacity as Deputy Minister of Arts, Culture, Science and Technology, but left after being ordered by Thabo Mbeki, South Africa's First Deputy President, to return home.

Tribe seeks return of chief's head

Johannesburg: Weeks before the Queen visits South Africa, tribal leaders are asking Britain to return the head of one of their most famous kings, which they believe is being kept in England (Michael Hamlyn writes).

They say it was taken there 167 years ago, after one of the nine South African frontier wars between the British and Xhosa people of the Eastern Cape.

King Hintsa, acknowledged as paramount chief by 10,000 Xhosas in the late 1820s and early 1830s, was shot trying to escape after being defeated by British troops under Sir Harry Smith, in 1835. There is a strong belief among his amaRarabe tribe that after he was killed, his head was taken to London. Now the amaRarabe want the head back, for a traditional burial. President Mandela is expected to raise the matter with the Queen, who he greets in Cape Town on March 19.

America dashes Pretoria hopes of helicopter sale

BY MICHAEL EVANS, DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

A DAMAGING dispute between Washington and Pretoria over arms sales policy looks set to scupper South Africa's chances of winning a £1 billion contract to sell up to 91 attack helicopters to the British Army.

Denel, the South African defence manufacturing company, is one of six contenders for the helicopter contract due to be announced in the summer. Denel has offered its Rooivalk (Red Hawk) attack helicopter for the British Army Air Corps.

To meet tough specifications laid down by the Ministry of Defence in London, Denel has asked the United States to supply a special gunsight for the Rooivalk which would be offered as an alternative to the domestic system which is not so advanced.

However, America has refused the request because the American Justice Department is involved in court proceedings against Armscor, the former South African armaments industry, set up to circumvent international sanctions during the apartheid era. Seven South Africans have been charged with illegal export of American technology to Pretoria in 1981-1989.

The decision has provoked an angry response from Denel, which took over Armscor's manufacturing functions in April 1992 as a new state-owned company. Armscor is now the equipment procurement branch of the Ministry of Defence in Pretoria. A Denel official said yesterday that Washington had refused to recognise "that Armscor has nothing to do with us now". He said the US ban was "impinging" on relations between America and South Africa.

South African security sources, quoted in Africa Confidential, a specialist journal, said that Washington's decision to block the sale of the gunsight for the Rooivalk was made for short-term commercial reasons. One of the strongest contenders for the British Army helicopter contract is the Apache, built by the American firm, McDonnell-Douglas.

Today Thabo Mbeki, the South African First Deputy President, is due to arrive in Washington to put pressure on the Administration to reverse the decision. President Mandela has appealed personally to President Clinton, emphasising that an export sale of Rooivalks would create jobs for black people. Mr Mbeki is to see Al Gore, the Vice-President.

Denel was asked by the British defence ministry to bid for the contract only at a late stage because of the recognition that it was a highly versatile aircraft.

Indiana senator poses new challenge to Dole following budget defeat

Lugar takes long shot at Republican candidacy

FROM MARTIN FLETCHER IN WASHINGTON

Robert Dole, left, whose reputation tumbled yesterday, and Richard Lugar, who announced his candidacy

ALL senators supposedly see a president when they look in a mirror, and Capitol Hill's present incumbents are no exception. On Thursday night Richard Lugar of Indiana became the third — after Robert Dole and Phil Gramm — to announce his candidacy for the Republicans' 1996 presidential nomination.

The three men are undeterred by the fact that just one sitting Republican senator this century, Barry Goldwater, has won his party's nomination, but events earlier on Thursday demonstrated the handicap under which they labour.

Republican primary voters like ideological purists. To push legislation through the Senate requires compromise. Mr Dole, the Senate leader, offered the Democrats all sorts of concessions to win approval of the balanced budget constitutional amendment but still failed to deliver, with the result that his stock tumbled yesterday.

The Republican presidential market may be about to undergo a further upheaval. All signs from the West Coast suggest that Pete Wilson, the Governor of California, is preparing to run, and he boasts the nation's biggest and richest political base.

Mr Lugar, who is 62 and who announced his candidacy on CNN's Larry King Live show, is a long shot. He has an impressive record as an Oxford Rhodes Scholar, naval officer, businessman, highly-regarded Mayor of Indianapolis and Indiana's first four-term senator. He commands respect in Washington, but his platform seems unlikely to resonate with the party activists who choose the nominee.

He is running on his considerable foreign policy expertise when domestic issues dominate the political agenda. His fiscal conservatism is offset by an unfashionable social moderation. He admitted he would raise less money than his better known and better organised rivals, but insisted that did not disqualify him. "The thought that a $20-million (£13.3-million) or $25-million entry fee is required is obnoxious to the American people," he said.

Mr Dole received a small boost yesterday when Colorado's Ben Nighthorse Campbell, the first Native American senator, defected to the Republicans, stretching their majority to eight, but that was eclipsed by the fallout from the balanced budget amendment's defeat.

Most commentators agreed that had undercut Mr Dole's strongest claim to the Republican nomination — his ability as a savvy old leader and legislator to convert the Republican "revolution" from rhetoric to reality. Moreover Mr Dole's problems may soon deepen because the Senate is stalling at three other key elements of Newt Gingrich's Contract with America — middle-class tax cuts, limits on congressional terms, and a measure empowering the President to cut wasteful individual projects from congressional spending Bills.

To the extent Mr Dole fails to deliver, Mr Gramm's call for radical change gains appeal. The Texas senator yesterday moved swiftly to exploit Mr Dole's difficulties with a line designed to rouse party activists. "It's time to stop compromising and start fighting," he said.

In California, Mr Wilson has been contacting the main Republican donors, honing his message and dropping hints that he will stand.

"He's itching to run," said one close aide. His problem is that he was only re-elected Governor four months ago and would infuriate many Californian Republicans if he consigned the state to its Democratic lieutenant governor. Mr Wilson is the Republican the White House fears most. President Clinton cannot be re-elected without carrying California, and Mr Wilson's uncanny ability to spot and exploit "wedge" issues — crime, illegal immigration and now reverse discrimination — makes him a formidable campaigner.

He could also split the national Republican party as he has split California's. He supports gay and abortion rights and in 1991 enacted California's biggest tax increase.

Mexico's ruling party finds little to celebrate 66 years on

BY DAVID ADAMS, LATIN AMERICA CORRESPONDENT

WHEN President Zedillo took office three months ago Mexico's ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party was riding the crest of a wave of new popularity after a year of political troubles.

As the party prepares to celebrate 66 years in power at the weekend, however, its officials are accused of involvement in two political assassinations, and the country is in no mood for festivities.

In a sign of just how bad things are, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, the former President, who left office three months ago as an internationally respected statesman, announced that he was going on hunger strike until his name is cleared of any involvement in the killings. His brother Raúl is accused of masterminding the murder of the party's former secretary-general. Other party members are being investigated for the murder of its presidential candidate.

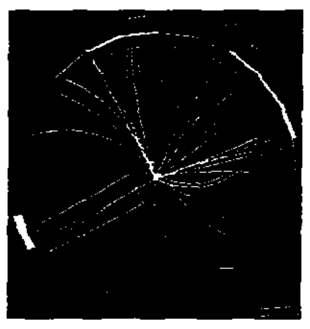
To its members, the party is the embodiment of the Mexican revolution of 1910-29 which gave birth to the modern state. To its enemies, it is a mafia-like family which has exercised an exclusive grip on power. Señor Zedillo, appears determined to break the hold of the family and to establish the rule of law. Some say he is the ideal man for the job because of his working class roots.

The party reportedly has so many skeletons in its closet, and was so riddled with the kind of corrupt practices necessary to stay in power for so long, that Señor Zedillo's clearing out of the stables could involve a brutal purge. Observers fear a backlash from party die-hards, who have long resisted reform. "It's very scary; it makes my blood go cold," said Fernando Estrada, a former congressman and highly respected adviser to the opposition National Action Party.

Some observers fear that Señor Zedillo may have underestimated the task and that the country could be heading for greater instability and violence. That is something Mexico can ill afford as the Government struggles to restrain a runaway economic crisis. The stock market has lost almost half its value and the peso has fallen more than 40 per cent, despite a $52-billion (£33-billion) international intervention by big banks and the United States Treasury.

In the southern state of Chiapas, the Government is far from resolving the 14-month Zapatista peasant uprising, and last month launched a military assault. This was called off, however, after the masked rebel leader known as Commander Marcos evaded troops.

Critics of the party's arcane and corrupt system of government would say the chickens are coming home to roost. They say it bungled the economic crisis and most blame Señor Salinas for building a house of cards of speculative foreign investment while ignoring the country's languishing production sector.



A shower of subatomic particles leaving a trail across a bubble chamber, and providing evidence for the existence of the most elusive of the building blocks of matter — the top quark. Two independent teams of scientists at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory near Chicago have isolated the top quark, completing the theory of matter in the universe (Anjana Ahuja writes).

Of the six types of quark postulated — top, bottom, charm, strange, up and down — only the last two survived the Big Bang; the others have to be created artificially in collisions between beams of protons and antiprotons racing around a four-mile accelerator. Once created, the top quark decays almost instantly into cascades of other particles, whose tracks are captured in the bubble chamber.

'Greedy' lawyers in Rodney King case awarded £1m costs

FROM GILES WHITTELL IN LOS ANGELES

ALMOST four years after Rodney King's brutal beating by police, the City of Los Angeles has approved a $1.7 million (more than £1 million) payment to his lawyers in the hope of closing once and for all the case that led to the city's devastating 1992 riots.

The riots were triggered when an all-white jury acquitted four white police officers accused of Mr King's beating, which was videotaped by a witness.

Two of the officers were convicted later during a second trial, after which Mr King sued the city.

In a marathon court struggle, watched nervously by local leaders, Mr King's lawyers demanded $56 million in damages, a sum which, if awarded, would have set a crippling precedent in a city where police brutality lawsuits have become everyday occurrences. Mr King was eventually awarded $3.6 million last year in a compromise which was praised by police and civil rights activists alike — but not by Milton Grimes and Steven Lerman, the defence lawyers who protested that the award did not cover their costs.

Mr Grimes, one of California's most prominent black lawyers, had demanded $4.4 million to cover his costs alone. But he earned the ridicule of his peers by claiming reimbursement for the suits Mr King wore in court and for taking him to a celebrity screening of the film Malcolm X.

Johnnie Cochran, who is now acting as O.J. Simpson's defence lawyer and who is a friend and rival of Mr Grimes, commented that "Rodney King, instead of being remembered as a man who was unjustly beaten and who got some justice, is now perceived as the man who had those greedy lawyers".

Somali children die in fire from departing Marines

FROM SAM KILEY IN MOGADISHU

AMERICAN Marines killed several Somalis and wounded dozens more in volleys of cannon and rifle fire as they left Mogadishu early yesterday at the end of the United Nations' failed mission to restore order in the anarchic country.

As the last platoons of Marines splashed aboard combat hovercraft, gunners on armoured amphibious vehicles let loose with hundreds of cannon rounds and heavy machinegun fire, illuminating the pre-dawn sky with scarlet tracer to frighten off militiamen.

But stray rounds slammed into buildings a mile away. Hassan Ahmed Dine said at the Benadir hospital in the centre of the Somali capital that three of his children had been wounded by the Americans and his youngest son was killed in his sleep when cannon shells burst inside the children's bedroom. The hospital recorded 28 overnight admissions, mostly suffering from shrapnel wounds.

Two people sleeping on the verandah of a house opposite the UN's World Food Programme offices were killed. The bed of one of the victims lay in the garden with blood and tissue clinging to the hole made by a cannon round.

A US Defence Department spokesman said he was not certain, but believed that six Somalis had been killed in at least four incidents. The Somali National Alliance put the number of dead at 13, with 30 wounded.

Watching Somalis said Marines had not come under fire. Marine Lieutenant-General Tony Zinni, who commanded the Operation United Shield withdrawal, told Cable News Network from a warship off Somalia that his forces took action only when they were directly threatened.

General Muhammad Farrah Aidid, Chairman of the Somali National Alliance, which seized control of the port and airport moments after the Marines departed, said that the withdrawal was a "special present" for the Somali people as part of their celebrations of Eid ul-Fitr, the end of Ramadan, which came yesterday. He repeated his "commitment" to peace and security in Somalia, and said militias from the south of the capital would soon be reunited with their clan enemies in the north under a joint command. "We are all tired of war," he said.

General Aidid has repeatedly signed peace deals and promised reconciliation with other warlords in Somalia, but in the past such agreements have always lead to renewed conflict.

Yesterday, over juice and cakes served in the newly-renovated house where he lived until it was destroyed by American aircraft in 1993, he insisted that he would respect proposals to allow a committee of several clans to manage the port and airport, which were abandoned by the UN this week.

General Aidid said Somalia would not be plunged back into chaos. "There will not be any more civil war. There will be peace. I am pleased that all foreign forces have left."

But as his battle wagons surrounded the port and airport, it seemed unlikely to most Somalis that he would agree to dilute his own power.

O.J. witness fails to deny claim of cash for evidence

FROM GILES WHITTELL IN LOS ANGELES

PROSECUTORS in the O.J. Simpson trial claim that his chief alibi witness was offered $5,000 (£3,150) to give false evidence that she saw the one-time footballer's car outside his house on the night Nicole Brown Simpson, his former wife, and her friend Ronald Goldman were murdered.

The allegation came towards the end of six hours of cross-examination of Rosa Lopez that left her credibility in tatters and Mr Simpson's alibi bolstered only by her apparent amnesia. Ms Lopez, a former housekeeper for Mr Simpson's neighbours, is the only witness to have come forward in support of the defendant's claim that he was at home at about 10.15pm on June 12 last year, the time when the prosecution contends the murders took place.

When Christopher Darden, a district attorney, suggested during his cross-examination that Ms Lopez had been offered money for her testimony, she did not deny it. Pressing home his advantage, Mr Darden asked whether she had told a friend and fellow housekeeper that she, too, would be paid $5,000 if she gave evidence that Mr Simpson's white Ford Bronco was outside his home at 10.15.

"I don't remember having said it, sir," Ms Lopez replied. She gave her evidence in Spanish through an interpreter.

"I don't remember" was a phrase she repeated more than 50 times as Mr Darden questioned her on many inconsistencies in her evidence, which was videotaped in the jury's absence. Whether or not it is shown to the jurors later has not been decided. If the jury does see the tape, they may well be torn between sympathy for a frightened Salvadorean immigrant thrust into the spotlight and contempt for a witness succesfully portrayed by Mr Darden as a defence puppet.

Johnnie Cochran, the leading defence lawyer, objected strongly when accused by the prosecution of signalling answers to Ms Lopez, but remained silent during Mr Darden's questioning about possible payment for false evidence.

Ms Lopez, who first appeared in court last week in a purple velvetine tracksuit, has since been clothed and accommodated at the defence's expense. She admitted being given cheques worth $636 for new dresses and suits.

Mr Simpson has pleaded not guilty to murdering his former wife and Goldman.

Chain-gangs return to Alabama

FROM BEN MACINTYRE IN NEW YORK

IN A throwback to an earlier era of penal history, prison authorities in Alabama are reintroducing "chain-gangs", teams of convicts shackled together in leg irons who will clear litter from the state's busiest roads.

Chain-gangs were a familiar sight in the American South during the first part of this century, but the practice gradually became a byword for the kind of prison brutality immortalised in song and film, perhaps most notably by Paul Newman in Cool Hand Luke.

Public opinion turned sharply against the punishment in 1932 with the release of the film I Am a Fugitive From a Chain-Gang, depicting the fate of an innocent man sentenced to work on one of the gangs. This year Ron Jones, Alabama's new prison commissioner, ordered 300 sets of leg-irons, making Alabama the first state to reintroduce the chain-gang as part of a tougher policy towards the custody of prisoners.

Donald Claxton, a spokesman for Fob James, the state governor, said that the sight of chained convicts would help to counter the public impression that "all inmates do is watch soap operas and drink Coca-Cola".

Mr Jones plans to send out gangs of five convicts, with just eight feet of chain between each man. "With leg shackles we can put higher-risk inmates to work," he said.

The reintroduction of the chain-gang in Alabama has prompted intense criticism from prisoner welfare groups and others who say that making such a public spectacle of convicts is reminiscent of medieval punishment methods. They are certain that it will further alienate hardened criminals from society.

"I find it fascinating that the corrections system is turning back the hands of time when the rest of the world is moving forward," Rob Hoelter, director of the National Centre on Institutions and Alternatives, said.

The American Civil Liberties Union described the image of shackled men once again trudging Southern roads as horrible.

You really can be confident in FRENCH, SPANISH GERMAN or ITALIAN in 3½ weeks.

You get a much warmer response when you travel and command more respect in business, if you speak another language. It also helps greatly with school progress.

But many people are put off learning a language because they fear it takes too long, will be too difficult or bluntly, will be boring.

Why? Because traditional methods have often put too much emphasis on pure reading and writing. The common complaint is "I can read a bit of French – but I can't speak it."

Accelerated Learning is a very different method, based on Nobel Prize winning research. You learn the way you learned English – through a unique combination of seeing, hearing and doing.

ALL THE WAYS TO LEARN

Physical Learning. By imitating the actions on a unique video and repeating the phrases you see on super titles, you learn key vocabulary quickly and easily. Watching and imitating is how you started to speak as a child.

Auditory Learning. You listen to a series of realistic and intriguing radio plays on 12 cassettes. You become absorbed in the story and motivated to hear what's next. The plays cover all the important situations you'll meet and you absorb vocabulary easily in a natural way.

There are parts you can practise in the car and even a part where the story is repeated to music, a technique that involves the left brain (words & logic) and the right brain (music and creativity). The words become as easy to remember as a song.

Visual Learning. In your course the foreign language has the English text immediately alongside. It helps you absorb the words naturally and easily. Then key phrases are vividly and memorably illustrated through "Memory Maps". When you recall the images, you recall the words.

Total Involvement. There are dozens of games and activities to get you using your new language in natural and enjoyable ways. One, the Name Game, unlocks the meaning of thousands of words from the very first day.

It's the unique multi-media combination that engages your whole brain and gets you speaking confidently in such a short time. And fluent communication gives you a wonderful sense of achievement.

PROVE IT TO YOURSELF

15 DAY FREE TRIAL GUARANTEE

We invite you to order with this reassurance. We will not process your cheque or credit card for at least 15 days after we dispatch your course. If you are not completely satisfied that this is the fastest and most enjoyable way to learn a language, simply return the programme and you will have paid nothing. That's how sure we are.

THE METHOD WORKS

Education News says, "It's radically different – there are so many features about it that recommend it to the learner." The Institute of Bankers says, "Accelerated Learning is the new competitive weapon."

Mensa says, "It's revolutionary." The Daily Mail reported that "Children using Accelerated Learning are racing ahead." "The results are spectacular"

BBC and ITV news recently reported on a school where ten times more students using Accelerated Learning Courses got top marks compared with those using conventional courses.

Australian TV news reported "Astonishing fluency." "They did two years work in three months."

Hundreds of companies for whom proficiency is vital use Accelerated Learning for language and general training – such as British Airports Authority, Boeing, Boots, Esso, IBM, Kodak, ICI, Rover, Glaxo, Sony, Tesco, Nestle, Lloyds Bank etc.

FLUENCY COMES QUICKLY

Can you really speak well in 3½ weeks? Yes, the record so far was 31 hours of study to pass the Institute of Linguists Preliminary Certificate. Think what you could achieve in a month! Order today on FREEPHONE (0800) 243351 (24 hours) or use the coupon below.

The millennium provides a perfect opportunity to tackle the blight of world poverty. Basil Hume urges us all to seize it

A date for richer and poorer

Next week's World Summit on Social Development in Copenhagen is fundamentally a summit about morality. Since it will be followed up by a special session of the UN General Assembly in the year 2000, the summit could also make a significant impact on preparations to mark the millennium.

For this to happen the critical importance of the summit's outcome must be far more widely acknowledged and promoted. This is the first time heads of state meet to consider globally the social needs of all peoples. Issues discussed in isolation at previous UN conferences such as Rio and Cairo will be integrated into a systematic programme of action, responding to three of the most acute moral demands facing the world today: the eradication of poverty, employment creation and social integration.

Many states fear the negative social impact of the rapid transformation now taking place in the global economy, which is hastening global economic and social interdependence. The summit testifies to the emerging importance of the UN as political leaders increasingly recognise that effective and lasting solutions require concerted action.

The summit's draft declaration stresses that social development is indispensable for peace within and between nations. It also proclaims that social development is a necessary foundation for sustainable development and economic prosperity. This seems a remarkable revision of priorities when it has often been thought right as well as necessary to put off social development in the "short" term to achieve immediate economic growth. By addressing the issue of global social development head-on, this summit goes to the heart of the most sensitive and profound challenge facing all societies at the turn of the millennium.

The millennium is born of religious symbolism. Christians celebrating the coming of Christ 2,000 years ago build on the Jewish tradition of a jubilee year. Every 50 years a jubilee was to be declared when the slate of debts would be wiped clean, slaves would be freed and all would regain a stake in the promised land. In the Gospel Jesus proclaims that the abundance of the whole earth is promised by God as an inheritance to the poor, the hungry and the weak. However much the jubilee remains an unfulfilled ideal, and the divine promise is obstructed, two profound truths are being highlighted: that justice demands the protection of the weak, and that God has given the fruits of the earth to everyone. Nations, companies and persons are only stewards of God's gifts, charged with using them in a just way. Private property is not an absolute right, but always comes with a "social mortgage": the greater needs of others may affect the use made of it.

Remarkably, this moral theme of justice for all resonates through the summit documents. A moral dimension has been recognised beyond the calculation of national and sectional self-interest. This is revealed most clearly by the number of specific commitments the summit proposes to reduce world poverty by 2000.

One key issue is debt. A requirement of the jubilee year was the remission of debt. In Africa particularly, many of the world's least developed countries are still crippled by unpayable external debts. Their situation is often exacerbated both by social disintegration and corruption and by the conditions sometimes imposed by lending institutions. This summit provides an outstanding opportunity to tackle this disastrous blight on the future of so many of the world's poorest nations.

Although the alleviation of global poverty will rightly loom large, it would be a mistake to see the purpose of this summit as being to help the poor countries of the South to develop as the North has. The consumption of the North is already ecologically unsustainable, and the summit challenges the so-called "developed" world to reexamine what is meant by social development.

In developed countries many people live in the grip of a powerful materialist culture, constantly driven by the belief that without more money, and the status and power it brings, there can be no fulfilment. Linked to this is a widespread lack of recognition of the crucial social importance of unpaid productive work, much of which is done by women at home looking after young families or older relatives. The evils of unemployment and material poverty are made ever harder to bear in a culture which has stripped away any other basis of value and self-respect than material wealth. Pope Paul VI called greed the worst form of moral underdevelopment. The over-consumption of the world's resources by developed countries is not only immoral, it deprives both rich and poor alike of authentic social development. It is unsustainable and indefensible.

Before society can be changed we have to change our minds in two ways. First, we must escape the mentality which isolates economic wealth as the goal to which all other goals are subordinated. Focusing on social development achieves this by putting the good of the human person centre-stage and emphasising that people matter more than what they produce. Second, we must recognise that social development can take place only in inclusive communities which aim at social integration. This is why the summit calls for a reorientation of values so that individuals and states see themselves as part of a larger, global, community to which they owe a responsibility.

Only these changes in moral outlook will generate the political will to allow leaders of the industrialised world to give due priority to raising one billion people worldwide out of abject poverty, and to implementing this summit's many commitments.

Is such a prospect Utopian? In recent years the seemingly impossible has developed an extraordinary knack of happening: the end of the Cold War, of apartheid, of terrorist violence in Northern Ireland. It is not beyond hope that our political leaders will embrace Copenhagen and take practical steps to implement its recommendations.

But we cannot delegate our own moral responsibility as citizens to those in authority. If we expect them to act, we must say so. In our own lives we can all do something, however slight, to live more simply, build community and reduce poverty. What we make of the coming millennium is up to us.

When capping doesn't fit

Tony Travers on how Tory local government policy has backfired

There used to be a joke about the Liberal Party being able to hold its conference in a telephone box. The state of the modern Conservative Party means its local government conference, which takes place in London this weekend, might also fit easily into a very small space.

The Tories control not a single major authority in Wales or Scotland. Of the higher-spending authorities in England, they have outright control of one metropolitan district (Trafford), one shire county (Buckinghamshire) and four London boroughs. Both Labour and the Liberal Democrats are riding high. Perhaps the only recent event to lighten the Conservatives' gloom was this week's resignation (some would say abolition) of Sir John Banham, chairman of the Local Government Commission. Banham had been widely blamed for the random nature of the commission's reorganisation proposals.

The slump in the Conservatives' grip on local political power is of more than theoretical importance — more than £70 billion is spent by local government each year. Councils control the funding of many parts of the welfare state, including schools, social services and much public housing.

Whitehall today uses local government as a kind of magic black box, which allows a number of wholly inconsistent decisions to be taken affecting the funding of major public services. Spending limits set for councils are far less generous than those for government departments. Ministers then concede pay settlements for two of the biggest local authority employee groups — teachers and police — that are significantly higher than the councils' permitted year-on-year spending increases. Such inconsistency is then compounded by requirements to provide new services. Talk about squaring the circle.

It is small wonder that loyal Conservatives in areas as diverse as Shropshire, Oxfordshire and Trafford have taken to the barricades over the funding of schools. They see the Government setting itself generous public spending targets and then foisting on them the difficult job of explaining away to angry local taxpayers the leaking school buildings and unrepaired roads.

The accountability of councillors to electors has thus been smashed. Before the introduction of capping and the huge rise in central control over council income, electors could blame councillors for any deficiencies in local spending. If schools had no books or too few teachers, the blame was fairly laid at the doors of town and county halls.

Now, the town hall blames Gillian Shephard or Kenneth Clarke. A shortage of money in a primary school in Cumbria or Cornwall has become the fault of a Cabinet minister several hundred miles away. Councils have been made irresponsible by the very government that was committed to restoring local accountability.

'Small wonder local Tories are taking to the barricades'

The impact of capping goes beyond the constitutional niceties of whether or not a particular set of elected people can be held to account for the raising and use of taxation; it is losing the Conservatives seats in local elections.

Now that capping is universal, low-spending rural shires find themselves treated in just the same way as their higher-spending city counterparts. Indeed, several inner London boroughs such as Lambeth have been more generously treated by capping in 1995-96 than most rural counties. This surreal equality has not gone down well with many shire Tories.

Capping has another, more direct, impact on voting patterns. Tories could usually rely on neighbouring Labour authorities to have higher local tax bills. The electorate would often switch votes to get lower tax bills. Now, capping restrains council tax bills in all authorities, ensuring that there is convergence. Wandsworth has announced it will double its local tax this year. Another flagship heads for the bottom.

Environment ministers have looked at the possibility of abandoning capping, but without success. But if councils were once again free to set their own budgets, differentials might develop between Conservative and other councils, giving the party some hope of clawing back local political control.

This weekend's gathering will be a sombre affair. Another round of disastrous local poll results will hit the news in May. Perhaps a smaller venue should be booked for next year's conference.

Who owns Priam's gold?

A second Trojan War is brewing over treasure found long ago

What a row is in the offing. Next January the Russians are to put on show what is known as Priam's Treasure. The hoard is of some 100 objects, including golden diadems, necklaces, earrings, swords and jewelled axes. They were unearthed in the ruins of Troy by Heinrich Schliemann in 1873 and taken from Berlin by Soviet soldiers in May 1945. For 45 years they vanished and were thought lost. To Moscow's Pushkin Museum the exhibition will be worth far more than its considerable weight in gold. But is the museum entitled to it?

The hoard is chiefly famous for what it is not. When his trowel hit the first golden dish, the bombastic and extrovert Schliemann was ecstatic. He cleared the site and excavated the cache alone, hiding the finds from Turkish officials and spiriting them secretly out of the country. He was convinced that he now possessed the treasury of King Priam. He adorned his young Greek wife, Sophia, with what he declared to be the personal jewels of Helen of Troy, and photographed her as the face that launched a thousand ships. The Turks were furious. The hoard is today recognised as much older than the Homeric era, but "Priam's Treasure" it has remained.

This week the Pushkin Museum hurriedly staged an exhibition of long-hidden pictures taken from Germany at the end of the war and dumped in its vaults. They include works by Cranach, Goya, El Greco and Tintoretto. The show was put on to pre-empt the much grander exhibition of looted German pictures at the Hermitage in St Petersburg on March 30. This will include outstanding works by Cézanne, Van Gogh, Degas and Renoir. Many of the pictures were pillaged from private as well as state galleries. Astonishing ghosts are rising from the dungeons of communism. War's business is apparently never finished.

The absence of information from either the Pushkin or the Hermitage had for 50 years left the world of looted German art as murky as that of the KGB. Occasionally works believed lost would seep out onto the art market. There were dark tales of forgeries, sales to Latin American drug barons, even of possible swaps. Experts assumed that somebody must have known the whereabouts of the lost private collections of the Krebs, Gerstenberg/Scharf and Koenigs families, not to mention the Priam Treasure. The Gerstenberg collection includes the great Degas of the Place de la Concorde. Not until 1993 did the Russians even admit that Priam's Treasure existed, in a locked room in the Pushkin known to just three senior staff.

Heinrich Schliemann with his Greek wife, Sophia, wearing a gold head-dress from the spectacular hoard unearthed in Troy

The Germans believe that half a million works of art disappeared into Russia in 1945, in a vast orgy of retaliatory plunder. The Russians claim the Nazis deserved it, given the Russian art works they destroyed or stole earlier in the war, including the Novgorod frescoes. The Allies went some way to restoring most of the art looted by the Nazis, but there was little flow in the opposite direction, back into Germany. When it comes to the trophies of war, memories are long and possession is glorious.

Russian secrecy about the trophy caches is what weakens its case. The furtiveness suggests a guilty conscience. The Germans have offered negotiations on reparation, swaps and even purchase, to get back works now known to be in Russian hands. What they find hard to accept is the Russian claim to title. Many of the pictures had themselves been looted by the Nazis: two works at the Pushkin exhibition have Hungarian Jewish names on their plates. Tough though it may be, and profitable for lawyers, somebody one day must decide to whom these works belong. Who really owns Priam's gold?

Simon Jenkins

From what I can see, Priam's Treasure belongs to the Turks, from whom Schliemann boasted he stole it. The Turkish Government has already asked for it back. According to Caroline Moorehead in her admirable The Lost Treasures of Troy, Schliemann took the treasure to Athens, where he put it on display and even promised to leave it to the Greek nation. He pondered giving it to America, London and St Petersburg before finally deciding on the Ethnographic Museum in Berlin, where it was duly displayed. Threatened by the greatest art destroyer of the war, Bomber Harris, the treasure was moved into the impregnable bunker at Berlin Zoo. It was there that the Russians "liberated" it in the summer of 1945.

So we have a mess. The Russians claim the treasure as war trophy. The Germans claim it as stolen property. The Turks claim it as loot smuggled from Troy. The Greeks might reasonably claim that the treasure was promised to them by Schliemann. (An American lawyer might even ask for it in compensation to the Greeks for having had to launch a thousand ships.) On top of this are dozens of Germans and others expecting the return of what nobody questions was once their property. If previously communist states can return houses and land to their former owners, why not goods and chattels?

The easy answer is to say, a plague on all of them. What you have you hold. Possession is nine tenths of the law. But not all peoples react in this helpful way, over works of art or over lost territory. Germany and Turkey both view Priam's Treasure as Greece does the Elgin Marbles or Britain did the Falklands. Objects can embody a nation's self-respect as much as land.

The museum curator's union at this point introduces its oldest ally, the thin end of the wedge. If you start talking about restitution where will you stop? If Priam's Treasure and the Degas Concorde, why not the Winged Victory, the walls of Babylon and the Philae obelisk? But these questions will not vanish. Such talk started long ago. Stalin returned Dresden's art collection looted by his soldiers in 1957. He also sent the Pergamon altar back to Berlin. All over the world, museums are negotiating deals on the return of "crown jewels" looted for imperial collections and now the subject of diplomatic pressure.

To be fair to both the Russians and the Germans in this matter, they have been negotiating on the future of war booty. The hope is that a series of exchanges could enable the Germans to recover some of what they lost and restore pictures to private owners. In return the Russians could be helped to fill gaps in their collections with works they could not possibly afford in the market. This makes eminent sense. But it requires German and other museums to be flexible about their existing collections, bluntly to lose in order to gain. As the German Ambassador said at the opening of the Pushkin show, there is here a chance to "break the vicious circle of war and blame".

Both sides are aware of the fierce nationalism now simmering in the Russian parliament, where a Bill is already being debated to "nationalise" all war trophies emerging from the grimmer vaults of communism. This subject is alive. It is high diplomacy. These caches could be currency, to help the Russians to rebuild what were once the most glorious museums and galleries in Europe. Or they could rankle for ages. The business of war is never over, but sometimes it can be turned to advantage.

THE TIMES DIARY

Lack of trust

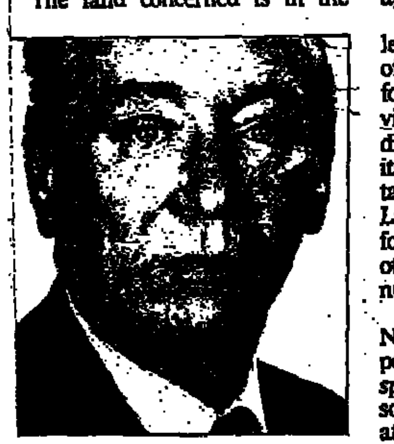
THE NATIONAL Trust stands to lose vast tracts of the finest countryside in the Lake District as a result of the continuing pressure on foxhunting. Lord Lonsdale, 72, who leases nearly 17,000 acres to the trust, is worried about extending the lease which comes up next year because he fears that the trust might ban fox-hunting.

The land concerned is in the heart of the Lake District. It includes the Langdale Pikes as well as parts of Helvellyn, Grasmere, Rydal Water and Elterwater.

"If the trust were to ban hunting, it would be of serious consequence to the farmers up here," he said. "So I am uneasy about granting them a new, longer lease. Members of the trust have tried time and time again to ban hunting."

The Lake District, home of the legendary John Peel, has five packs of hounds which are followed on foot. Lord Lonsdale has made his views clear to Sir Angus Stirling, director-general of the trust, and to its chairman, Lord Chorley. "Foxes take the lambs. The function of the Lake District packs is to kill the foxes on the high fells. There are no other known means of keeping the numbers down."

Under the current lease, the National Trust rents the land at a peppercorn rent. Yesterday, a spokesman acknowledged that some of its finest countryside was at stake. "We would be very distressed if we were denied access to so much glorious countryside in the Lake District."



Lonsdale: lease threat

Greens party

JOHN MAJOR'S struggle to keep control of his party is to move to the fairways and greens of the nation's golf courses. His pairing whip, Andrew MacKay, responsible for ensuring that MPs vote the right way, has been elected captain of the parliamentary golf society.

He takes over from Tim Yeo who steps down after four years in a job of crucial importance to many MPs. Competition is fierce among more than 40 MPs for places in the team of 12 that travels to the finest courses in the land. Any sign of insurrection in the lobbies could jeopardise their chances on the fairways. "Certainly it is a powerful job," he admits with satisfaction.

Hot spot

THE EARL of Pembroke made a flying visit to Dublin the other day. In passing, he explained how his family had acquired the vast tracts of land it once owned in the city — land which once belonged to another noble family, the Fitzwilliams. It was down to the unacceptable behaviour of a member of the Fitzwilliam family.

In 1816, explained Pembroke, Lord Fitzwilliam invited his nephew and heir to tea. The boy poured the tea into his saucer and blew over it because it was hot, and started slurping. The vulgarity so appalled Fitzwilliam that he disinherited his nephew on the spot and the estate went to Sidney Herbert, son of his friend, the Earl of Pembroke.

Max factor

NICK Leeson, the Barings rogue trader, is said to have phoned the publicist Max Clifford no fewer than four times for advice while in hiding. This was not, however, the first time that Clifford got involved with the Baring family.

Back in 1987, Clifford had dealings with an aspiring young actress named Katie Baring. "She came into my life at a time when I was busily working with Derek Hatton," says Clifford. "As far as I remember, I was just attracting a little bit of publicity for her, getting her to go to the odd premiere." The result was a series of tabloid articles about the blooming relationship between the banking heiress and the left-wing firebrand from Liverpool.

SPORTING hair like candy floss and a figure-hugging dress which looked like a horse blanket covered in flowers, the designer Vivienne Westwood said she wanted to move into publishing the other night. She is bored by the glossies and wants to do her own thing.

She was talking at a party thrown at Daphne's restaurant in Chelsea by the magazine Harpers & Queen to celebrate the arrival of their new fashion director, Tierney Gifford Horne. "I might look at a fashion magazine if somebody shows me something of mine that is featured, but I don't find them very exciting," she said. "If I'm on a flight the last thing I want to do is read one."

Westwood: higher plane

Her vision is rather different. "I want to set up my own intellectual salon where a whole range of people could come and the magazine would be tied in with that, not just fashion. It might just be a four-page freesheet to start with."

VALLEY OF DEBT

Who will take the blame for the Barings scandal?

While accountants and other scavengers pick over the ruins of the House of Barings, and while German lawyers ponder the fate of the world's now most famous banker, the pace of developments in this extraordinary saga is slowing. Such a pause in the plot would never have been allowed by Jeffrey Archer; but in this true-life drama, an interlude of quiet reflection is producing some noteworthy results.

The most striking has been the switch in public sympathy between the chief players. At the beginning of this week, Nick Leeson was the vulgar and arrogant barrow-boy whose brief riot of greed had destroyed a 200-year-old institution, wrecked the lives of 4,000 middle-class colleagues, betrayed his aristocratic superiors and brought shame upon the City of London and the whole of Britain. He was the financial equivalent of the football hooligans of Lansdowne Road.

Now the tables are turning. The brash Mr Leeson is starting to look like a victim and a scapegoat for the errors of others. The villains now seem to be the elegant, complacent managers of Barings, with their royal connections, their rounded vowels and their hints of moral inferiority in the lower social ranks. Perhaps this was not a case of Essex Man's wanton vandalism but a financial re-enactment of the Charge of the Light Brigade, a foppish charge into the valley of debt. Since this is a true story and not an Archer novel, we will have to wait to find out what really happened, what caused the collapse and whose fault it was. But even without the option of skipping to the final chapter, a few conclusions can be drawn.

The first is that a corporate fiasco like this should never be blamed solely on the unpredictable actions of one employee. A core function of management is to maintain controls that protect a company from the dishonesty or incompetence of any one "rogue" employee — be he the head of the company, like Robert Maxwell, or a middle-ranking manager, like Mr Leeson. If Barings did not have such controls, then the senior management must bear responsibility. For a securities business to allow itself to be destroyed by a "rogue" trader is like a zoo not bothering to lock its cages and blaming a "rogue" tiger for the carnage.

The second lesson, which follows from the first, is that the British economic establishment is dangerously complacent about the City's commercial prospects. One instance was Eddie George's smug insistence that a disaster like this could have struck "any bank, anywhere, at any time". A more important case of complacency was the Bank of England's failure to find a way of guaranteeing Barings's deposits, while penalising its shareholders and management. A rescue of Barings's shareholders and senior management was not required: they almost certainly deserved the losses they are going to suffer. Depositors and commercial creditors, however, should not have been put at risk by an incident of this kind. A guarantee need not be a "bail-out".

The Bank's refusal to act as a lender of last resort in this case has permanently damaged the creditworthiness of all other British merchant banks. The prospect of Holland's ING Bank buying the whole of Barings and protecting depositors from losses does not excuse the Bank of England's inaction. On the contrary, the ease with which Barings's admininstrators were able to liquidate Mr Leeson's outstanding positions, only demonstrated the inaccuracy of the Bank's claim that Barings could not be underwritten because its liabilities were a "black hole".

Whoever gets the final blame, the main lesson is all too clear. Although London may remain Europe's financial capital, Britain's financial industry could easily come to be dominated by foreign-owned companies that are better managed, better financed, and staffed by better employees than their British rivals. The smugness and mismanagement that ruined the British-owned car industry in the 1970s and undermined Lloyd's in the 1980s could also undo Britain's banks.

YELTSIN AND A MAFIA MURDER

Broadcasters in the front line for freedom

The assassination of Vladislav Listyev, a senior Russian television journalist, has shocked Russia. Even in a country inured to gangland killings and the regular murder of bankers, politicians and businessmen, the brazen intimidation of free speech by the country's powerful mafia has provoked widespread fear and anger. As President Yeltsin acknowledged, the murder is a lesson for everyone. It shows that organised crime now has such a hold that the authorities appear powerless to challenge it. Like a cancer, it is eating away at the vital organs of reform, free politics, free enterprise and now free speech.

No one doubts that the death of Mr Listyev was a contract killing, carried out on the orders of the mafia. The young journalist was more than just a campaigning anchorman of a popular news programme. He was the embodiment of the new press freedom, which since the beginning of glasnost has been the guarantor of reform. To many Russians, he was the man who refused to be intimidated. As long as he appeared regularly in people's homes, democratic freedoms, under pressure on so many other fronts, appeared to be holding. Under President Yeltsin there have been many attempts to force the press back into the subservient role of propagandist lackey it played during the Soviet era. So far they have largely failed, thanks to the courage of individual journalists and broadcasters.

It was not for his democratic thinking or beliefs that Mr Listyev was killed, however. What the mafia clearly feared was the new ban on television advertising, which he would have enforced in the launch of Public Russian Television. Advertising is a milch cow for the mafia. The multi-billion-rouble industry has been infiltrated by shady figures, who in turn push the products on which mafia "businessmen" grow rich through payoffs, private monopolies and protection rackets.

Mr Yeltsin, by a swift personal appearance in the television headquarters, acknowledged the symbolic importance of this most blatant silencing of a public figure since he came to power. He immediately accepted some of the blame, saying he had not done enough to stamp out gangsterism, bribe-taking and crime. His actions in response were typically intemperate: he sacked the head of the Moscow Interior Ministry police and the capital's Prosecutor-General. The unfortunate pair can hardly be held personally responsible for the hydra-headed mafia; but their removal was a symbolic and visible move to reassure nervous Muscovites.

More than this is needed. Crime is the most significant barrier to foreign investment, democratic reform and the building of a civil society. It is, overwhelmingly, the chief concern of those living in the big towns. Mr Yeltsin said he had feared to crack down until now lest he be accused of trying to resuscitate a police state. Almost no Russian would oppose the proper enforcement even of existing laws. Crime has been tolerated too long because too many people in Mr Yeltsin's own administration have profited, directly or indirectly, from illegality. New measures need not threaten democracy: the press, above all, has been its best guardian until now. This is presumably also the reasoning of the mafia. And this is why Mr Listyev paid with his life.

SLICE OF LIFE

The great Californian deep panic pizza

A man has been sentenced to life imprisonment in California for stealing a slice of pepperoni pizza. The bizarre fate of pizza-thief Jerry Dewayne Williams was sealed by a bill passed last year in California's state legislature. The public strongly supported a proposal that offenders who have committed two serious or violent crimes would automatically be sentenced to life imprisonment on a third conviction.

Williams's third offence was absurdly trivial. After asking for pizza from a group of children and being turned down, he seized a slice without permission. An observer called the police who proceeded to prosecute Williams although the theft did not involve assault or any legally "aggravating" circumstances. In itself, it was a misdemeanour. But by virtue of Williams's previous convictions for robbery, attempted robbery, drug possession and unauthorised use of a vehicle, the unlawful taking of a slice of pizza was upgraded to a felony. On a legal principle borrowed from baseball — three strikes and you're out — the judge had to sentence Williams to prison for life.

As California still makes a distinction between felonies and misdemeanours (where British law does not), the self-contradictory category of "felonious petty theft" was coined to describe the crime. This elevation of an offence to a far more serious status on the ground of a defendant's history seems to breach the rules of both criminal justice and logic. In Britain, previous convictions may be taken into account by a judge when passing sentence, but the sentence cannot exceed the statutory maximum for the particular offence under trial. American judges too have traditionally had discretion in considering past convictions. The new California law which prohibits any such discretionary power may now have to be tested in the Supreme Court.

This measure was passed in a wave of public frustration over rising crime and lenient sentencing. By insisting on its indiscriminate application, the public was deliberately limiting what it saw as a too permissive judiciary. The assumption was that if repeat offenders were faced inescapably with very harsh punishment, they would be deterred from further crimes. What went unnoticed was that they would also be deterred from leaving alive any witnesses to their later crimes.

Over a thousand cases have already been brought under the new law in Los Angeles County alone. Many of those will have dealt with the kind of habitual violent offenders at whom the policy was aimed. But the mechanistic application of such a principle was bound to result in risible injustice. Public opinion cannot be ignored by the courts but sentencing should be a matter for individual judgment, not blanket procedures.

Weighing responsibilities over the Barings collapse

From Professor Tim Congdon

Sir, William Rees-Mogg's column of February 28, "Who will bank in the City now?", raises important issues [also letters, March 1, 2]. As noted in your leader of the same day, the vital distinction in "saving a bank" is surely between shareholders and depositors.

No one has suggested that the Bank of England's lender-of-last-resort responsibility involves a commitment to protect the shareholders from their own mistakes. But the matter is quite different with depositors. Many historical precedents justify Lord Rees-Mogg's claim that the Bank of England should try to ensure that Barings' deposits are repaid in full. As he says, uncertainty about the value of these deposits — indeed, the risk that they may be worthless — will affect "the credit of the City" more generally.

However, there is a problem. In the very recent case of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International the Bank of England refused to help depositors, and it now seems certain that they will eventually receive only part of their money back. How are the BCCI and Barings cases different? Surely, the heart of the answer is that most people would regard Barings as a British bank, and therefore a responsibility of the Bank of England, whereas BCCI was a bank of indeterminate nationality.

But that will not quite do. Even though BCCI was headquartered in Luxembourg and largely owned in the Gulf, many of its depositors were British. (The ethnic origins of these depositors is of course of no relevance to the case.) So there would appear to be a gross inequity in the Bank of England helping Barings' depositors, but not BCCI's, and that may explain Mr George's decision not "to save Barings".

The fundamental question raised by Lord Rees-Mogg becomes the nature of the lender-of-last-resort responsibility in an era of global banking. In the old days the customers of British banks could look to the Bank of England for help in an emergency, because they knew how to recognise a British bank. But nowadays a number of significant banks are no longer of a specific nationality.

Yours etc,
TIM CONGDON
(Managing Director),
Lombard Street Research Ltd,
33 Lombard Street, EC3.
March 1.

From Mr M. H. Hodgson

Sir, A merchant bank gets into financial trouble. The Bank of England convenes a meeting of top bankers but they fail to find a solution to the problem and the merchant bank falls into administration. The Governor of the Bank of England is then castigated by William Rees-Mogg ("How a great bank was brought low", February 27) for not underwriting the losses of Barings despite their huge and open-ended nature.

Over the last twenty years or so, hundreds of companies in the West Midlands and other traditional industrial areas have gone into receivership, often at the instigation of their bankers. Some sympathy has been expressed for individuals who have lost their jobs, but the general City view has been that this was an appropriate market response to management failure.

Why the difference?

Yours faithfully,
M. H. HODGSON,
44 Rose Hill, Rednal, Birmingham.
March 2.

From Mr Anthony J. Budden

Sir, The use of derivatives by bankers to hedge against a specific risk is defensible as part of a programme of risk management.

Using call options to speculate in an unrelated market, as appears to have been the case with Barings, is, however, gambling and should be disallowed. The distinction is easily made.

Hedging is a device to reduce losses and will not normally produce large gains. The fact that Barings made huge profits last year and rewarded Mr Leeson with a reported bonus of £2.5 million indicates that speculating may have been part of corporate policy and the eventual occurrence of huge losses was inevitable.

Yours truly,
A. J. BUDDEN,
4 Belvedere Villas, Bath, Avon.
March 2.

From Mr Philip Sagar

Sir, In the past decade many international banks suffered grievous losses as a result of loans made to Third World countries. The banks' shareholders saw the value of their investments drop and many, often innocent, employees lost their jobs as banks sought to offset their losses by reducing their costs.

But the money lent was real money and despite bad management by the borrowing governments at least some of it should have ended up as dams, roads, hospitals, etc, aimed at benefiting the ordinary people. There was some purpose here.

What about the derivatives trading which has led to the Barings tragedy? The billions of dollars traded were not real but the billion dollar loss was. What was the purpose of the trading? Profit. Benefit to "society" never came into it. The result? Two hundred years of dedicated and responsible banking destroyed. To what purpose?

What a pity that we can't close down these derivative markets.

Yours etc,
PHILIP SAGAR,
29 Chemin des Hutins,
1247 Anières, Geneva.

Battle honours on field of Agincourt

From Baroness White of Rhymney

Sir, It is St David's Day and I cannot forbear from comment on your vision of the "Birth of a nation" (leading article, February 25) and the report you published on the same day.

Your suggestion that we should commemorate the Hundred Years War, in particular the victory of Henry V at Agincourt, as "a vital chapter in the formation of our national identity" strikes somewhat unconvincingly on Welsh ears. Your leader is all too clearly intended for the English element only.

The victory at Agincourt was primarily due to the 5,000 longbowmen, mainly from Gwent, recognised then and now as the most effective troops for open warfare in their day. As Professor G. M. Trevelyan once commented, "it was always easier to recruit infantry among the poor of Wales than among the settled and peaceable English". Giraldus Cambrensis knew this too.

To refer solely to "the champions of embryonic Englishness" is going too far. Shakespeare had more sense when, in Henry V, Act 4, scene 7, he makes Fluellen say: "I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's Day", whereupon King Harry responds: "I wear it for a memorable honour; For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman."

Harry was born in Monmouth, where he is still honoured, with Agincourt Square a main attraction. Monmouth was shifted to England by Henry VIII, but ultimately restored. As a resident in the County of Gwent, I am indeed glad to welcome the English but to remain firmly Welsh.

Yours faithfully,
EIRENE WHITE,
House of Lords.
March 1.

From Mr Nicholas M. White

Sir, You make great play of the English victories at Crécy, Poitiers and Agincourt, leading us to believe that the English emerged victorious from the Hundred Years War.

Nothing could be further from the truth. By the end of that war, in 1453, we had lost all of our territories in southwest France, including the wine-growing region of Gascony, which had been in English hands since the 12th century. The only remaining English possession across the Channel was Calais, and we only held that for another 105 years.

We have been European partners of the French for 22 years now; surely it is time we started treating them as equals and buried our historical differences.

Yours faithfully,
N. M. WHITE,
Judge's Cottage, 29 Main Road,
Sundridge, Sevenoaks, Kent.
February 25.

From Mr Cellan Williams

Sir, Crécy, Poitiers, Agincourt. We won the battles but we lost the war. That is why we do not remember it.

Yours faithfully,
CELLAN WILLIAMS,
5 The Glebe, Wheatley, Oxford.

Silencing Sir John

From Mr R. E. B. Atkinson

Sir, Sir John Banham (report, March 3) was appointed by the Government to chair an inquiry into the structure of local government. He was supposed to come to the conclusions which the Government had first thought of.

Having taken meticulous and detailed evidence from the people and having arrived instead at a democratic conclusion, he is dismissed by the State.

Poor Sir John: like the Danes in their referendum, he got the wrong answer. Politics is about the power of the State not the will of the people.

Yours etc,
RODNEY E. B. ATKINSON,
60 Ashbourne Court,
Woodside Park Road, Finchley, N12.
March 3.

From Mr J. C. Bolton

Sir, Sir John Banham's resignation as chairman of the Local Government Commission highlights yet again the Government's isolation and arrogance.

Because Sir John actually dares to sound out public opinion at local level rather than perform as a puppet, he is forced to resign.

No wonder that the present Government is more unpopular than any since 1945 and has lost the support of its traditional voters.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN BOLTON,
Baytree Cottage,
East Clandon, Guildford, Surrey.

Art of flying in the best company

From Ms Debra Enderby

Sir, I would like to thank Harvey Elliott ("The ABC of landing a better seat", March 2) for addressing the issue of seat upgrades on aircraft and especially for highlighting the discrimination we all know happens but could never prove. I am, of course, referring to the group of travellers who almost never achieve upgrade unless they are with their spouses: women.

As Mr Elliott points out, it helps to wear a business suit, shirt and tie, or blazer and flannels. Hardly feminine apparel, but perhaps I will try it next time I fly.

Yours etc,
D. ENDERBY,
19 Sweet Briar Walk, Edmonton, N18.

From Sir Curtis Keeble

Sir, Poor Harvey Elliott. What a struggle he goes through in order to escape the "horrors of economy class". We, the select group of travellers who buy our airline tickets out of our own taxed income, feel for him as he manoeuvres to escape from proximity to us and our children and "move forwards through the curtain" into the world of those whose tickets are paid for by a government or a business or an airline.

Long may he cherish the illusion that his new neighbour "probably paid twice as much for his or her ticket". The chances are that he paid nothing at all, or indeed that as a reward for the fare which the taxpayer or the shareholder paid on his behalf he will, as a "frequent flyer", be entitled on some future journey to the privilege of travelling with the fare-paying class.

Welcome to you, Harvey, when you next join us in the airline outback. Perhaps you will qualify for the accolade, not of SFU — "suitable for upgrade" — but of the PT — "personal traveller". You may feel a bit out of it in your ripped jeans, but we'll treat you charitably.

Just one word of warning, though. Buy your Times before you board. There may not be a free one left.

Yours faithfully,
CURTIS KEEBLE,
Dormers, St Leonards Road,
Thames Ditton, Surrey.

Blocking the view

From Mr Peter Gorb

Sir, The daffodils and crocuses in Hyde Park, adjacent to the Park Lane carriageway, are at their best this week. What a pleasant prospect they would provide for Londoners and tourists if it wasn't for the coaches in between.

Why do we allow these multi-coloured monsters to park nose to tail on one of London's few grand routes and disfigure and obscure one of the best views of our most important city park?

Yours faithfully,
PETER GORB,
17 Redington Road, NW3.
March 3.

Seen and noted

From Dr Dennis Nixon

Sir, Some years ago I accepted on my GP list a "difficult" patient. Some eight weeks later her previous records reached me (letter, February 25).

The last entry was: "Has moved to Collingham — Hurrah!"

Yours faithfully,
D. NIXON,
The Chestnuts, Collingham,
Newark, Nottingham.
March 1.

From Mrs Linda Drake

Sir, After the delivery of my second son, in 1984, I was annoyed to read in my medical records the entry: "Mother appears disappointed with sex of baby."

"Astonished" would have been more accurate as, following several scans during pregnancy, I had been assured the baby would be a girl.

Yours sincerely,
LINDA DRAKE,
14 College Gardens,
Dulwich, SE21.

Caesar buried?

From Ms Caroline Raphael

Sir, Good heavens! What are the readers of The Times to believe? On February 7 you carried a news report telling us that BBC Radio Drama was paying Hollywood stars peanuts for their performances in our production of Julius Caesar.

Today we are accused by Peter Barnard of throwing millions of pounds at them ("Caesar buried by Tinseltown", Arts).

For the record, the American cast were paid the usual Equity rates and the whole production, on a cost-per-hour basis, cost less than the production it was compared to, The Newgate Calendar.

We're sorry Mr Barnard did not enjoy our production, but undeterred we shall continue to perform Shakespeare regularly, exploring every conceivable way of presenting his work on radio.

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE RAPHAEL
(Head of Drama, BBC Radio), Broadcasting House, W1.

Climbing life's ladder

From Mr R. P. Stewart

Sir, Mr Vaughan-Jackson (letter, February 28) reflects that he and his wife have passed from "Dinkys" (Dual incomes, no kids yet) to "Orchids" (One recent child, heavily in debt) and are now at the stage of being "Triffids" (Three recent infants, falling further into debt).

Their problems are only just beginning. As one who has trod the way before, I now find that I am at the stage of being "Tepid" (Tastes expensive, pension inadequate. Dammit!).

Yours faithfully,
R. P. STEWART,
5 Bath Square,
Spice Island,
Old Portsmouth, Hampshire.
March 1.

From Mr John Barnes

Sir, The Vaughan-Jacksons have a long way to go. Undoubtedly, they will become "Kitbags" (Kids in teens, bankrupt and grey) — but, on the brighter side, they will eventually achieve the status of "Flopsies" (Family left, on pension, suddenly in Eldorado).

Yours sincerely,
JOHN BARNES,
2 Arundel Avenue,
Mickleover, Derby.

From Dr A. F. Ollerenshaw

Sir, In about forty years' time your correspondent and his wife will be "Plants" (Pensioners looking after numerous toddlers).

Yours faithfully,
A. F. OLLERENSHAW,
52 Lightfoot Lane,
Preston, Lancashire.

From Mr Andrew Plant

Sir, The Vaughan-Jacksons should take care to avoid becoming "Tulips" (Two used leftover insolvent parents).

Yours optimistically,
ANDREW M. PLANT,
4 Minster Precincts,
Peterborough, Cambridgeshire.

Parson's freehold

From the Reverend Michael Windridge

Sir, Abolition of the ecclesiastical freehold (report, February 22) could greatly alter the balance of power within the Church, accelerating the removal of that power from clergy, parochial church councils (PCCs) and parishioners into the hands of the diocesan bishop and his officials.

Sir Timothy Hoare, in his consultative paper, says that if the freehold were to be abolished > it would be important to ensure that nothing was done which undermined the concept of the priest living among the people he or she serves . . . procedures would need to be established to ensure that clergy were not given notice to leave a post arbitrarily and without proper consideration.

Considerations of the clergy freehold are too important to be left to the clergy alone. Sir Timothy acknowledges that clergy conditions of service are of importance to PCCs as well. Although PCCs have been given no formal encouragement by the Church to do so, I hope they will make their own representations to diocesan synods before the deadline set for diocesan responses of June 2, 1995.

Yours faithfully,
MICHAEL WINDRIDGE,
Ferndene,
Broaden Lane, Hempnall, Norfolk.
February 24.

From the Rector of Chatham

Sir, A shepherd must defend his sheep. This he, or she, cannot do effectively without the necessary independence of action. One of the disturbing consequences of contracted priests-in-charge has been the threat of non-renewal of contract unless the particular priest "toes the line". Anecdotal evidence for this exists even in cases where the priest was faithfully representing the collective will of his churchwardens, PCC, congregation, parishioners and patron.

Regular clergy appraisal is healthy and must come, provided it is done well, whilst more effective measures to facilitate the "release" and care of ineffective clergy certainly ought to be introduced, provided hierarchy and flock concur. Freehold is not a perfect system, but whatever replaces it must be demonstrated satisfactorily to be in every respect better.

Yours faithfully,
R. CAMPBELL PAGET,
The Rectory,
65 Maidstone Road, Chatham, Kent.

Danson House, unloved and derelict for 25 years, is now promised a three-year restoration programme

£2.3 million to save decaying mansion

By John Young

ENGLISH Heritage is to spend £2.3 million on buying and restoring a grand Palladian house in southeast London which has been left to decay for a quarter of a century.

Government authorisation for the expenditure on Danson House in Bexley comes after years of wrangling, during which the house was allowed to become derelict and the fittings and decorations removed without authorisation. The work is expected to take up to three years.

The house, built in 1760 and listed Grade I, was designed by Sir Robert Taylor, one of the leading exponents of the Palladian movement, and is one of the few such villas to have survived largely unaltered. In 1924 the house and the park in which it stands, the work of Capability Brown, were acquired by Bexley council.

Since 1970 it has been empty, except for a brief period in the 1980s when it was occupied by Laurie Taylor, a builder, who planned to use it as offices and showrooms. In return he agreed to restore it, for which English Heritage authorised a grant of £324,000.

Only part of the grant was paid because of disagreement over the way the work was being carried out. In 1991 it was stripped of many of its rare and valuable decorative fittings, which police later recovered from a storeroom in another part of the country.

Further negotiations between English Heritage and the council came to nothing and Len Newton, then Conservative leader of the council, said he would "never vote a penny piece towards the cost of restoration". In September 1991 it was put on the market but failed to find a buyer.

Soon after last year's local elections, when Labour gained control with Liberal Democrat support, the council agreed in principle to transfer the house and stable block to English Heritage on a 999-year lease.

New uses for the house and stables will be examined while the repair work is in progress, and a purchaser will be sought for the stable block to defray part of the cost.

Jocelyn Stevens, chairman of English Heritage, said yesterday: "I am delighted that we are being allowed to save Danson House. It is one of London's great architectural masterpieces. I look forward to the time when the public will be able to enjoy it again."

OBITUARIES

BRIGADIER ARTHUR HARDY

Brigadier Arthur Hardy, MBE, MC, former commandant of the Royal Artillery's air defence school, died on February 19 aged 80. He was born on February 18, 1915.

ARTHUR HARDY won an immediate Military Cross in the Western Desert when he led his artillery unit on a near-suicide mission at the Battle of Sidi Rezegh in November 1941. The action took place as Rommel counter-attacked the British advance, codenamed Crusader, which was an attempt by the Eighth Army to reoccupy Cyrenaica and link up with the Australian garrison in Tobruk.

The garrison, which had been strongly reinforced by sea with a brigade of tanks, was to break out as the relieving force approached the beleaguered fortress. It was Churchill's hope that the German and Italian armies might thus be caught between two fires and totally destroyed.

But initial British progress was halted by the vigour of the German riposte at Sidi Rezegh. As the German panzers thrust forward, two troops of J Battery 3rd Royal Horse Artillery (RHA), one of which was commanded by Hardy, were ordered to take up position in front of the British positions, to provide a forward screen against the enemy.

Each was armed with a mounted two-pounder anti-tank gun whose 40mm solid shot was, however, woefully inadequate to its task, since it was only effective against German 50mm thick armour at the close range of 500 yards. And the British anti-tank artillery was outranged by the 57mm guns mounted by the latest marks of the German Panzerkampfwagen III (although Rommel still had a number of the old 37mm gun tanks).

The fact that the German counterstroke had achieved complete tactical surprise momentarily rendered the British position perilous in the extreme, notwithstanding that the Eighth Army had a large overall numerical superiority in tanks. Rommel's chief asset lay in his own anti-tank guns, his new, long-barrelled, high-velocity 50mm cannon providing him with a high degree of security against British tank thrusts, since it could penetrate 86mm of armour at 500 yards. The British Crusader tanks, which Churchill had had rushed to Egypt from Britain in the important "Tiger" convoy to give decisive punch to the Crusader campaign, were with their 40mm armour an easy prey to such a weapon and suffered heavy casualties.

Nevertheless the bravery and acumen displayed by Hardy in the ensuing battle — which was conducted throughout with a ferocity not until then seen in the desert campaign — led later to warm tributes being paid to his leadership. Along with the other troop commander, Lieutenant Gunn, and the battery commander, Major Pinney, he was actually recommended for a Victoria Cross. But only Gunn received the supreme award for gallantry, Hardy having to be content with the award of an MC.

Pinney was in fact killed shortly afterwards while Hardy, wounded in the leg in a later engagement, was evacuated to hospital in this country. He recovered, to establish a reputation after the war as a leading gunnery tactician of his day, and was at one time chief instructor at the School of Artillery, Larkhill.

Yet he had started his long gunner's career in the ranks — and against the wishes and fears of his own parents. Born in Leicester, Horace Arthur Hardy was a tailor's son. He had always set his heart on being a soldier but his parents' memories of the slaughter on the Western Front during the First World War made them reluctant to endorse such an ambition.

The young Hardy had therefore to bide his time, taking a succession of local jobs, until he was 21 — the age of majority in those days — and accordingly able to take such decisions for himself. In spite of his parents' misgivings he joined the 3rd RHA's M battery, with which he served in Palestine and Egypt before the war — winning much accelerated promotion to Warrant Officer Class III, a now defunct rank. He was granted a wartime commission in April 1941, just in time to assume command of a troop for the Crusader offensive.

After the wounds he sustained in North Africa, Hardy spent some time in hospital in England. When he came out he was seconded to the public relations directorate of the Army where he remained until the beginning of 1945.

He returned to his career with the artillery early in 1945 when he was posted to an anti-tank training regiment in Shoeburyness as an instructor. His wartime commission was converted to a regular commission and he next went on the long gunnery course at Larkhill. He was to spend much of the next quarter of a century as an instructor.

He taught at the School of Artillery in Deolali, near Bombay — returning at the time of Partition to a similar post in Britain. Then in the early 1950s he served in the Canal Zone in Egypt, where he was promoted major and appointed a battery commander with 6th Field Regiment. He moved with the regiment to West Germany, where it was deployed at Hohne in Lower Saxony, before being made the British Army of the Rhine's senior gunnery instructor at the Northern Army Group ranges.

Promoted lieutenant-colonel in 1959, he took command of 32nd Medium Regiment, first in Hong Kong before returning with it to Germany where it was based at Dortmund. For his next appointment he was once more sent back to Larkhill, this time as chief instructor and a full colonel.

Hardy was made a brigadier in 1964, becoming Commander Royal Artillery (CRA) of 49th West Riding and North Midlands TA Division. This was followed by his final appointment as commandant of the anti-aircraft school at Manorbier, Pembrokeshire — curiously his first job in air defence. He became an ADC to the Queen at the same time.

After retiring from the Army in 1970 he became for a while secretary of the Constitutional Club in Bristol, but regarded that as more of a paid pastime than a second career.

In his youth he had been a keen photographer and a radio enthusiast. But, as the years went by and his military responsibilities grew, the Army, and the study of gunnery in particular, absorbed him entirely. Although he had no difficulty in unbending, he was above everything a dedicated professional and perfectionist.

Arthur Hardy is survived *by his wife Elizabeth, the one-*time physiotherapist who cared for him when he was wounded in the war, and by one son.

MICHAEL WICKHAM

Michael Wickham, furniture maker and designer, died on January 23 aged 85. He was born on August 11, 1909.

AN ARTIST, photographer, furniture maker, gardener, musician and gastronome, Michael Wickham was an inspired "Jack-of-all-arts". He had a huge visual influence on the designer Sir Terence Conran, and made furniture for Conran's Habitat shop in the Fulham Road, when it opened in 1964.

Michael Whalley Wickham was educated at Marlborough College and studied portrait and landscape painting at the Royal Academy. He then lived with an artistic community near Cassis, with the painter Braque and the sculptor Varda. In 1938 he took part in the Mass Observation scheme, a social survey of Bolton, carried out under the direction of Tom Harrisson by artists and poets such as Julian Trevelyan and Stephen Spender. He had already joined the Communist Party and he remained a member until 1956 when the Soviet tanks entered Hungary. During the war he taught himself engineering and mathematics, worked on munitions and helped design the first plastic fuel systems for Spitfires.

After the war he helped to set up the Council for Industrial Design in 1947, and when escorting the young Princess Elizabeth on a visit to the council shocked conventionalists by wearing bright pink socks and a brown bowler. In 1948 he began work as a fashion photographer on Vogue magazine and in 1949 joined the team of the new House and Garden.

Through House and Garden he met Terence Conran in the early 1950s and together they toured France on a holiday which was to change the latter's view on life: "I had only seen dreary old Britain and Michael opened my eyes to a whole new way of living. We drove off in a Lagonda and sketched and ate and argued furiously about communism, looked at architecture and slept in ditches." They sought out the ironmongers in every town and Conran talked about opening a shop to sell a selection of what they found. In the late 1950s Douglas Collins, the perfumer, sponsored Wickham in a workshop in London and he began to design and make handmade furniture for the first Habitat.

Wickham's talents and industry were boundless. He could apparently make anything, and if he did not have the tool with which to make it, would make the tool. He taught himself to play the piano and played Bach every morning. He was also a good linguist, speaking French, Spanish and Italian, and in 1960 he began Russian lessons, eventually being able to read all the Russian classics.

During the 1980s he reverted to painting but perhaps his greatest work was his home at the National Trust village of Coleshill, on the Berkshire-Wiltshire border. This had once been the laundry to the English renaissance mansion of Coleshill House (burnt to the ground in 1952). The ground plan of the house was planted with beds and edging forming a true replica, adorned with pots, tables, statues, greenhouses, compost heaps, cats and watering cans.

Wickham remained in his workshop, his studio or his garden until the day he died. He would occasionally break off to sit at his 12 ft-wide elm circular kitchen table. Huge though it was, it always seemed to be overflowing with flowers, home-made jams, olives, wine, French china, other people's children and visitors. The company was as eclectic as the contents — one might meet the Editor of The Guardian, the local Tory MP, the Prince of Wales or the architect Jim Stirling.

He first married Peggy Earnshaw, herself a painter; secondly the Russian painter Tatiana Van Langendonk; thirdly the writer Cynthia Blackburn; and fourthly Denny Andrews. She survives him, together with four sons and three daughters.

KARL GRUBER

Karl Gruber, Foreign Minister of Austria, 1945-53, died on February 1 aged 85. He was born on May 3, 1909.

AS AUSTRIA's Foreign Minister in the immediate postwar years, Karl Gruber proved to be a forceful and effective figure who managed, in often difficult circumstances, to consolidate his country's relations with the Western powers — on which it ultimately depended — while combining firmness with conciliation in his dealings with the Russians.

His period in office from 1945 to 1953 was a crucial time for Austria, and for Europe, during which two subjects primarily engaged him. The first was the long drawn-out process of negotiation with the victorious Allies, who continued to occupy Austria until October 1955. These negotiations eventually resulted, after several setbacks, in the full restoration of Austria as an independent country on the right side of the Iron Curtain.

The second was the brave but unsuccessful effort to redress one of the anomalies of the Versailles settlement whereby the German-speaking population of the South Tyrol had, without any true justification been transferred to Italy — where it remains today.

Gruber was himself a Tyroler. Tall and fair, he took a law degree in Vienna and then became an electrical engineer working at the Austrian General Post Office.

Following the Anschluss he disappeared into the Tyrol Mountains — one jump ahead of the Gestapo — where deserters and a few partisans were beginning to harass the Germans. Gruber became their leader and led the liberation of Innsbruck from Nazi troops, liaising with United States agents in Switzerland under the direction of Allen Dulles. He thus helped to prepare the way for the entry of American forces and in the process became provincial governor. He went on to became Austria's Foreign Minister after the first post-war elections held in November 1945.

His first concern was to regain for Austria the industrial resources that had been first seized by Nazi Germany and then, after the war, by the Soviet Union. These resources accounted for 70 per cent of the Austrian economic output. He then set about pressing the Allies for the withdrawal of the occupation forces.

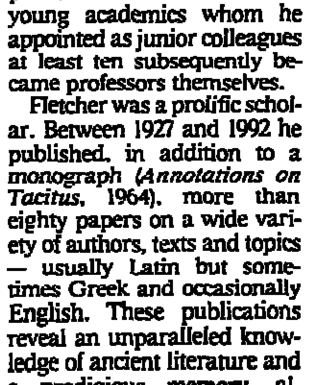
However, the final reward — the signing of a State Treaty with Austria by the Allies, ending the occupation and recognising Austrian independence — was denied Gruber personally because of friction that developed between him and some of his political colleagues. This was brought to a head by the publication of a book, Between Liberation and Liberty, in which he alleged that the Federal Chancellor, Leopold Fiegl, and others had gone behind the backs of their Socialist coalition partners by offering the Communist Party more influence in the Government in exchange for a promise to obtain concessions from the Soviet Union. Gruber expressed his regrets but was forced to resign.

The Government, loath to lose his services completely, sent him to Washington as Ambassador, a post he handled with distinction from 1954 to 1957, feeling a natural affinity with Americans. He afterward held embassies in Madrid, Bonn, and Berne, and served a second term in Washington, 1970-73. He also held various official posts at home including that of special adviser to the International Atomic Energy Agency from 1958 to 1960.

In 1986, he returned to the public arena briefly to defend the reputation of Kurt Waldheim, the former United Nations Secretary-General who was campaigning for election as Austrian President. Describing himself as Dr Waldheim's "first boss after the war", Gruber said that Waldheim had been his secretary in the Foreign Ministry from 1946, having been recommended by his predecessor, Fritz Molden, an Austrian anti-Nazi resistance fighter who wore a US lieutenant's uniform as a member of the then Office of Strategic Services, the forerunner of the Central Intelligence Agency. Molden later married the daughter of Allen Dulles, the first CIA chief. Gruber maintained that Waldheim was a good democrat who was never a Nazi.

As a public figure, Karl Gruber was an attractive personality who combined a Siegfried-like physical presence with a forceful intelligence that won him continuing popular regard. Throughout his career he was greatly assisted by his wife, formerly Helga Ahlgrimm, who survives him. There were no children.

PROFESSOR G. B. A. FLETCHER



G. B. A. Fletcher, Professor of Classics, 1937-46, and then of Latin, 1946-69, at King's College, Newcastle upon Tyne, died on February 8 aged 91. He was born on November 28, 1903.

THE clue to Geoffrey Fletcher's career lay in the four years he spent at King's College, Cambridge, in the 1920s. It was not merely that he obtained firsts in both parts of the Classical Tripos. He also fell under the spell of A. E. Housman, whose scholarship he revered and whose poetry he was later to publish. Housman became his model, not just as a classicist but for his whole approach to life.

Geoffrey Bernard Abbott Fletcher was educated at Rugby School and King's College, Cambridge. After a year as a research student, in 1927 he became an assistant lecturer in Classics at Leeds. In 1928 he moved as lecturer in Greek to Liverpool, where he spent the next six years. He arrived in Newcastle (King's College was then part of the University of Durham) as a fully-fledged professor in 1937 and remained there for the rest of his career, seeing the old King's College develop into the University of Newcastle upon Tyne in 1963.

As Head of Classics for 32 years he brought about its significant expansion. In particular, he saw to it that the classical holdings in the university college's library matched those in virtually any other provincial academic institution. He was especially proud of the fact that of the young academics whom he appointed as junior colleagues at least ten subsequently became professors themselves.

Fletcher was a prolific scholar. Between 1927 and 1992 he published, in addition to a monograph (Annotations on Tacitus, 1964), more than eighty papers on a wide variety of authors, texts and topics — usually Latin but sometimes Greek and occasionally English. These publications reveal an unparalleled knowledge of ancient literature and a prodigious memory, although their unique and minimalist style, coupled with his tendency to correct the mistakes he detected in the work of other scholars, did not endear him to all his colleagues — and drew from Eduard Fraenkel the sobriquet "Fletcherismus".

Yet, despite the Housman-like persona which emerges from his writings, there were no lengths to which he would not go in order to perform a scholarly service for those who ventured to ask for his help; the prefaces to numerous classical works testify to the frequency with which he placed his learning at the disposal of other academics.

Fletcher lived the life of a gentleman scholar, looked after by a housekeeper and surrounded by his fabled library of roughly 20,000 volumes. He loved music (Mozart was his favourite), played the piano and watched cricket. In earlier days he would travel on the Continent with Sir Frank Adcock (1886-1968), Professor of Ancient History at Cambridge and a fellow Kingsman, in order to visit art galleries and enjoy architecture. Otherwise, he had very few close friends and — like Housman — was an intensely private man who for much of his life discouraged even the normal human courtesies.

Yet for many years he received regular letters from those former students in whom he inspired affection; and after retirement, when his guard had dropped a little, he delighted to exchange academic gossip with former colleagues.

He never married.

ON THIS DAY

March 4 1922

A doctor was said to have called at a patient's house when under the influence of drink and later to have operated on her while she was not sufficiently anaesthetised. The patient died and he was sent to prison.

DOCTOR SENT TO PRISON.

WOMAN PATIENT'S DEATH.

At Durham Assizes yesterday, the trial was concluded of DR. EDWARD ERNEST WILLIS, 50, of New Herrington, on the indictment charging him with the manslaughter of Eleanor Davison, the young wife of a miner. It was alleged by the prosecution that the woman's death was due to his negligence in performing a serious operation for eclampsia : that when he first called at the house he was under the influence of drink, and the woman's husband refused to allow him to operate : and that when he called some hours later and operated the woman was never properly under the influence of the anaesthetic. After an absence of 35 minutes the jury found Dr. Willis Guilty and MR. JUSTICE BRAY sentenced him to 12 months' imprisonment in the second division.

Dr. Willis, continuing his evidence, said that while he was on war service in Egypt he suffered from malaria, to which he had previously been subject. He denied in cross-examination that he was in the least under the influence of drink when he first called at the house.

Mr. Mitchell Innes.—Can you suggest why, if there were no symptoms of drunkenness shown by yourself, they came to the conclusion you were drunk?—Because probably I smelt of it.

The witness said it was quite true that before going to the house at 6.30 he had had drink, but he was certainly not under its influence. He did not remember Mrs. Davison calling out during the operation. People generally called out under an anaesthetic. It was not true she was calling out more or less all the time.

After the jury's verdict, letters were put in stating that Dr. Willis had always borne the highest character.

MOTORIST ACQUITTED BUT CENSURED.

Before Mr. Justice Darling, at the Central Criminal Court yesterday, JOHN SYDNEY KING, 20, on bail, was found Not Guilty of the manslaughter of William Albert Haines, aged 15, a Post Office messenger, who was knocked down by the defendant's motor-car while cycling in the Uxbridge-road, Acton, on the night of January 5.

The foreman of the jury said it was the unanimous opinion that the defendant should be severely censured for his callous conduct in driving on after the accident.

MR. JUSTICE DARLING.—I entirely agree with what the jury have said, and I hope it will be a lesson for you at least to be more humane and show more consideration for people who suffer, even if the suffering is not caused by your negligence. The Judge added that the defendant's father had behaved admirably in the matter. Directly he heard of the accident he took his son to the police station, and gave every facility for the affair to be properly inquired into.

Learning that the dead boy was the main support of his father, MR. JUSTICE DARLING said the defendant might be liable for compensation, but that was a question which could only be decided in a civil court.

Banks step in as dollar plunges to record low

By Colin Narbrough and Gwen Robinson in Tokyo

CONCERTED waves of intervention by central banks around the world failed to prevent the US currency from falling to a record low against the yen amid fears that corporate Japan is about to sell off billions of dollars.

The latest bout of dollar weakness, which broke out on Thursday, prompted a flight to the safe haven of the hard Japanese, German and Swiss currencies that the central banks were unable to stem. Even the pound, recently weakened by political uncertainty, drew strength from the dollar's decline.

US government bonds, which had gained ground recently, dropped a full point as the dollar support action continued.

The hedge funds responded to intervention by unloading dollars, helping the currency slide to a new post-war low of close to 94 yen, and pushing it below DM1.44.

The dollar's status has been unsettled by the Mexico debacle and a flurry of other market shocks. But currency analysts said the markets were becoming fundamentally alarmed about the dollar dropping close to 90 yen, a level that would oblige Japanese companies to repatriate yen on a grand scale to meet domestic requirements on foreign exchange losses.

Robert Rubin, the US Treasury Secretary, said last night that a strong dollar was in America's national interest and that the Clinton Administration was working to reinforce it.

His statement, intended to underpin the dollar, came after the US Federal Reserve intervened aggressively in the market to no avail, buying dollars at around Y94.37 and DM1.4385.

After seven interest rate increases since February last year, the Fed is widely seen as reluctant to tighten further for fear of causing the US economy to falter.

In spite of Mr Rubin's remarks, the market perception is that the US authorities have lately been signalling a return to a policy of benign neglect concerning the exchange rate.

New York dealers said that the central bank activity, which started overnight and continued all day, appeared more aimed at managing decline than forcing the dollar back up.

Estimates of the overall size of the intervention suggested that only about $1 billion had been deployed in defence of the dollar by the European market close.

In London, the dollar closed at Y94.35, down from Thursday's Y96.22, and DM1.4368 after DM1.4600. Sterling climbed alomost a pfennig to finish at DM2.3291 and gained more than three cents to $1.6205.

In Tokyo, Japanese government leaders vowed to take concerted action to fight the record surge of the yen against the dollar.

Tomiichi Murayama, the Prime Minister, suggested after an emergency meeting with senior cabinet ministers and finance, trade and central bank officials that Tokyo should lead co-ordinated intervention by the central banks of the Group of Seven nations.

Masayoshi Takemura, the Finance Minister, said yesterday after the yen briefly knocked the dollar to a post-war low, that the Bank of Japan and the Fed would respond "appropriately" to the currency movements. "I am seriously worried about the yen's appreciation ... I am sure Japan, the United States and Europe will co-operate in their responses."

Koichi Takenaka, vice president of the Industrial Bank of Japan in New York, predicted there will be more and more buying of yen by Japanese firms as the month proceeds.

After American and Japanese intervention overnight, 15 European banks and the Bank Canada joined in the intervention yesterday morning, and followed up with two more waves of intervention during the day.

☐ The US Government's chief economic forecasting gauge was unchanged in January, suggesting the economy will continue to level off as the year progresses.

The Commerce Department said yesterday that its index of leading economic indicators remained flat after rising for two months. Separate factor orders data showed a 0.6 per cent increase in January, the weakest figure for three months.

Inquiry into use of swaps in bids

By George Sivell

THE City body that regulates British takeovers ordered an urgent inquiry last night into the use of financial derivatives such as options and swaps in bid battles.

The move follows the hostile Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric, the regional electricity company, which has been raging since before Christmas, and the collapse earlier this week of Barings, the merchant bank.

The Takeover Panel has been forced into holding an inquiry after an appeal by Northern against the ruling that Trafalgar's moves had been in keeping with the City Code on Takeovers.

But that finding may be explained by the panel's rules, which make reference mainly to the ordinary share capital of companies, and not to any derivatives of it. This further demonstrates the hidden power of the derivatives market which floored Barings.

Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England, is known also to have had reservations about the use of derivatives in hostile bids and is believed to have encouraged the Takeover Panel to take a fresh look at its rules. The Stock Exchange is also looking at its rules on derivatives.

Northern has a week to save itself from the £1.1 billion Trafalgar bid. If it loses its independence any subsequent changes in the rules will be resented by its directors.

Swiss Bank Corporation, the merchant bank adviser to Trafalgar, built up a 3 per cent stake in Northern and an 8 per cent stake in Yorkshire in the early stages of the bid.

The bank later revealed that it was hedging the Northern stake with the Yorkshire stake and using profits arising from the derivative trade to reduce Trafalgar's bid costs.

☐ According to Northern's defence document, the five most senior directors at Northern will share £3.5 million if the Trafalgar bid succeeds.

Lloyds chief's pay increases by 28%

By Martin Barrow

SIR BRIAN PITMAN, chief executive of Lloyds Bank, was paid £571,383 last year, 28 per cent more than in 1993.

His basic pay rose to £421,383 from £321,513 and he received a further £150,000 in respect of the company's staff profit sharing scheme and a profit-related payment.

Sir Robin Ibbs, chairman, said: "There was clear evidence that Sir Brian's pay was below the market rate for a top chief executive of a very large, successful business." He cited the bank's performance during difficult times. "People throughout the bank have contributed to these results but his leadership has been a crucial factor."

Sir Robin, a non-executive chairman, was paid £293,934 last year.

Sir Brian's pay rise drew criticism from the Banking, Insurance and Finance Union, which claims Lloyds' current pay offer is worth only 2 per cent on salary scales.

The rise was approved by a remuneration committee whose members include Sir Richard Greenbury, chairman of Marks & Spencer. Sir Richard heads a committee set up by the CBI to consider issues related to executive pay.

Public to be offered more power shares

By Martin Waller, deputy city editor

THE initial public offer of shares in National Power and PowerGen, the two quoted power generators, could have been filled twice, the Treasury said, and so the amount on offer to the public is being raised by up to 50 per cent.

More than one million people have applied for shares. Average individual investment was just below £3,000, against a £1,000 minimum set by the Government and its advisers.

It was intended to sell 40 per cent of the £4 billion issue direct to retail investors via a countrywide chain of share shops. But the overwhelming public demand, with applications worth £3 billion chasing shares worth £1.5 billion, has meant as much as 60 per cent may now go to the public.

Nearly all this will be through the UK Public Offer, targeted at the smaller investor and offering a 10p discount off the price the City institutions will pay, but as much as 5 per cent of the issue may now go to the retail tender offer, aimed at private investors who want a larger holding.

With the two companies already pledged to buy in 20 per cent of the shares on offer, this leaves a comparatively light 20 per cent to the institutions and virtually ensures that once dealings in the new shares start on Monday there will be a reasonable level of demand in the after-market.

The Treasury said the number of shares for the public would be decided over the weekend, but it was intended to have the UK public offer at least 1.5 times' subscribed.

Tomorrow the issue will be priced according to bids for the shares from institutions and that price announced. This will determine the cost of the public's third instalment, payable in September 1996.

Scene is set for the return of Gyngell

By Rachel Bridge and Martin Waller

THE Australian who painted the walls pink at TV-am and then staged a financial rescue for the then-ailing breakfast TV station, is thought to be packing his bags in his home country in readiness for a return to the British TV scene.

Bruce Gyngell, former chairman of TV-am, is favourite to become head of Yorkshire-Tyne Tees Television after his resignation from executive duties at Nine Network, Kerry Packer's Australian televison station.

The man known as Australia's Mr Television is stepping down as executive chairman of Packer's Nine Network Television Division "for family reasons". His English wife Kathy is thought to want to return to the UK.

But a power struggle with the chief executive of Nine Network, David Leckie, a man frequently described by observers as "outspoken" and "forceful", may also have played its part.

Mr Gyngell returned to Australia to head up Nine Network just two years ago, after Mr Packer regained control of the station from Alan Bond, the failed Australian businessman. But his links with the network date back to 1956, when he became the first face Australians saw on the screen. He opened the first television broadcast in Australia from a church hall in a Sydney suburb with the portentous words: "This is television."

A media analyst in Sydney said: "The Australian television industry is just not a big enough market. He's probably looking for another challenge."

That challenge is rumoured to be Yorkshire TV, where financial difficulties forced Clive Leach to step down as chief executive in 1993. Mr Gyngell, who brought a new style of management to TV-am, is known to have discussed the job with Ward Thomas, the septuagenarian former RAF pilot and a founder of Yorkshire TV, who was brought in as chairman to rescue the business.

Mr Thomas was in New York last night and could not be contacted. The company was not commenting on Mr Gyngell. However, one insider said: "He has to be a very serious contender, and obviously that's all I can say."

Over Baring, under managed

As you may have heard, Barings, which had made quite a reputation for itself over 233 years, has disappeared up its own derivative. Amazing. What can one say? Where does one start? Let us start with Peter Baring, chairman of the bank. This, after all, is where the buck, or rather the yen, stops.

On Monday, shortly after Ernst & Young had been appointed administrators, Mr Baring unburdened himself to the Pink 'un. Barings's chief clearly took the view that his bank had proved the victim of a conspiracy. Asked what Nick Leeson, Barings derivative conjuror, had in mind when he purchased $7 billion of futures positions on the Nikkei index, Mr Baring suggested that the bank may have been put at risk deliberately. In his words: "We simply cannot yet know exactly what happened. It is difficult to get a fix on the motivation of this fellow. But we share the view that the creation of a substantial hidden long position was the aim of the operation, by someone who no doubt is out there with a substantial short."

Mr Baring added: "Let us suppose that the putative associate approached our trader and said 'you should build up a long position at Barings so great that when Barings discover it they cannot possibly sustain it and remain solvent. I, meanwhile, will build up a short position and when Barings duly fails, I will have a wonderful opportunity to cover my short at a profit'." This, according to Mr Baring, was a "credible" account of events.

Credible, but not necessarily accurate. One of the reasons why the Bank of England and all the King's men couldn't put Barings together last weekend was the discovery, after much shuffling of paper in Singapore, that Mr Leeson's huge long position was not matched by a corresponding short. If the Bank of England had been able to identify even a cabal of counter parties holding major short positions, Barings might have been saved. Attempts would have been made to persuade such parties — at a price — to close out their positions. This, in turn, would have served to quantify much of Barings' liabilities. In the event, the number of counterparties to Leeson's longs proved so numerous that the Bank abandoned the unravelling option.

This left Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England, to search for a way to cap Barings's liabilities. Losses were estimated at more than £600 million and each one percentage point drop in the Nikkei index increased the bank's exposure by a further $70 million. Difficult, of course, for the chairman of a clearer, let alone a merchant bank, to stand up at an annual meeting and explain why he had felt it was in the best interests of shareholders to toss the bank's reserves into a bottomless pit.

Wanted: person with unlimited funds willing to jump into black hole. There was, by all accounts, only one reply to this small ad.

Enter the Sultan of Brunei, an associate of the Royal Family and a former client of Barings asset management arm. The Sultan's wealth, derived from oil revenues, is estimated at about $37 billion. Despite denials, speculation persisted during the Eighties that the Sultan's funds were linked to Mohamed Fayed's acquisiton of House of Fraser. As it happened, the Sultan of Brunei, via the Brunei Investment Authority, came close to buying a 50 per cent stake in Barings.

The Brunei Investment Authority (BIA), plus seven UK clearers and seven UK merchant banks, were tentatively prepared to put up £600 million worth of capital to enable Barings to continue trading. Short-term liquidity would have been provided by the Bank of England.

The BIA and the consortium would each have provided £300 million of loan capital, which would have been replaced by permanent capital within three months. According to a draft statement, the BIA "acting in conjunction with two major international institutions" was set to seal off Barings's black hole by purchasing Leeson's futures and options contracts. But, at approximately 8.30 on Sunday evening, the Sultan changed his mind. The Bank's rescue attempt promptly foundered.

What Mr Baring did not make much of when he revealed his conspiracy theory was that Barings's senior executives were warned of "a significant general risk" in relation to Leeson's operations way back in August. Unsurprisingly, the audit is understood to have highlighted the potential problems of permitting Leeson control over trading and settlement operations.

It would appear that Leeson's "exceptional" profits prompted the audit. During the first seven months of last year, Leeson's unit achieved profits of some $30 million, compared with group pretax profits of £54.8 million during the first half. This week, Mr Baring was unable to throw any light on why Leeson's activities had not been detected. Permit me to make a suggestion: might not appalling management have had something to do with this.

Enter the Serious Fraud Office yesterday, just in case lax management should prove but the tip of the iceberg.

Meanwhile, Wall Street's investment houses are, unsurprisingly, intent on cashing in. Yesterday's Wall Street Journal gives the flavour of the mood. I quote: "The collapse of venerable Barings and its possible takeover by Dutch bank Internationale Nederlanden Group underscores a great irony: while the City — London's financial district — has defied predictions and solidified its position as Europe's leading financial center, British investment firms are becoming second-tier players on their home turf.

"Baring's decline may have been more spectacular than most but it joins a long list of British financial institutions that have lost their independence in recent years. Morgan Grenfell, Hoare Govett and Phillips & Drew are just a few other well-known institutions that have been acquired by foreign banks."

And just to make you feel good, it adds: "In some ways, the decline of independent British investment banking isn't that unusual. The UK auto, steel and shipbuilding industries were once world leaders...."

Consumers pause for breath after Christmas spree

By Colin Narbrough

CONSUMERS reined back their use of credit sharply in January after splashing out with record borrowing in December, but were still resorting to credit more readily than at the same time last year.

Bank of England figures, published yesterday, showed net consumer credit rose £492 million, after adjustment for seasonal factors, in January, as retail sales dropped.

Although far below the increases of £694 million and £862 million respectively in November and December, credit growth in January was well up on the £281 million rise on the same month last year.

The strength of recent borrowing, despite the post-Christmas slowdown in January, is seen by economists as evidence that consumers are prepared to use credit to maintain consumption in the absence of income growth.

Adam Cole, UK economist at James Capel, the broker, said the strong rebound he expects in February's retail sales will deliver a similar bounce-back in consumer credit. He added the underlying trend in borrowing, excluding housing credit, is still "firmly upwards".

The flat housing market has left mortgage borrowing weak, but there otherwise appears to be no signs of any fundamental retrenchment, despite consumer concern about increased taxes and rising interest rates.

The strength of the year-on-year growth in consumer credit is expected to figure large at the next monetary policy meeting of Kenneth Clarke, the Chancellor, and Eddie George, Governor of the Bank of England, next Wednesday, when they consider the need for further tightening. The annual rate of increase in consumer credit acclerated to 11.4 per cent in January from 11 per cent in December.

Lending on credit cards rose by £115 million in January, compared with a £302 million rise in December. Other loans from retailers, banks, building societies, insurance companies and specialist lenders were up £378 million, after a £560 million rise in December.

While the consumer does not appear to be overly subdued by three interest rate rises, concern about interest rates and rising inflation has dented business confidence, according to the latest S G Warburg survey, conducted by MORI among 1,000 chairmen and senior executives of substantial listed companies.

The survey shows that a balance of 33 per cent of companies are now more optimistic about growth prospects than they were three months ago, well below the 57 per cent reported last September.

Russell Black (mirrored), chief executive, and Peter Johnson, chairman, of Nightfreight, whose profits rose £2.02 million to £4.5 million last year. A 2.25p final dividend makes a 3.38p total.

Gloomy outlook depresses Dawson

By Susan Gilchrist

SHARES in Dawson International sank to a low yesterday as the textiles group said that current-year profits would fall below City expectations. The shares, 235p two years ago, ended 12½p lower at 96½p.

In a bleak trading statement, the group said its performance had been adversely affected by difficult market conditions and the exceptionally mild winter. Analysts promptly downgraded their annual pre-tax profit forecasts by about £5 million to £25 million.

Dawson also gave warning that the bottom line could be hit by significant exceptional provisions after a review of its underperforming businesses. A spokesman refused to be drawn on the scale of any provisions but they could be as high as £20 million.

Yesterday's statement was Dawson's second profits warning in little more than a year. Some analysts suggested that it may force management changes. One said: "The patience of institutional shareholders must be running out."

Dawson has already been forced to make some boardroom changes. Last year, Philip Kemp, who built up the US operations, resigned and Nick Kuenssberg was promoted to managing director.

The decision followed the closure of the loss-making US fleece and jersey business that plunged the group £95.4 million into the red and precipitated a £45 million rights issue to shore up its battered balance sheet.

Further closures of some of its remaining businesses may now be on the cards after a study by Gemini Consulting, the management consultant.

Dawson refused to be drawn on which businesses were threatened, but analysts believe that the carpet operation, the US shower curtain business and some parts of the United Brands knitwear division could be casualties.

Harsh year sends Union into the red

TOUGH market conditions forced Union, the financial services group formerly called Union Discount, into the red last year, but the group yesterday said that its restructuring is progressing (Sarah Bagnall writes).

The group incurred a pretax loss of £3.5 million in the year to December 31 (£4.5 million profit), after a £1.8 million profit on the disposal of the Sales Aid leasing businesses. The final dividend of 1.5p makes a 3p total.

The shares stayed at 75p, compared to last year's £11 million rights price of 150p.

Money market activities lost £1.7 million and £901,000 was lost on derivative broking.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

MFI warning leaves share price weaker

SHARES in MFI, Britain's largest furniture retailer, fell 5p to 110p yesterday after the group gave warning that margins had come under pressure. John Randall, managing director, said gross margins in the second half had fallen by almost one percentage point from the 52.9 per cent achieved in the first six months. The news alarmed some City analysts, who downgraded their profit forecasts for the full year by about £5 million, to about £70 million.

Mr Randall attributed the bulk of the squeeze to significant rises in raw material costs. Chipboard prices have increased by between 15 and 20 per cent over the past six months, while paper prices have risen 40 per cent. Margins have also been hit by higher sales of products sourced externally. Like-for-like UK sales rose 6.1 per cent. MFI plans to address the problem by increasing the amount of products it manufactures in-house. It will also test customer reaction to price increases. Tempus, page 24

Thorn sells stores chain

THORN EMI has sold 231 former Rumbelows electrical stores to Escom, the German computer manufacturer and retailer, for an undisclosed sum only three weeks after it announced the closure of the loss-making chain. The 285 Rumbelows stores and 36 FONA outlets were due to close by the end of April, with the potential loss of 2,900 jobs. It is believed the sale could save several hundred jobs and reduce Thorn's provisions from £116 million to £100 million.

Henlys sales boost final

SOARING profits from bus and coach manufacturing more than outweighed poor trading in the motor dealing market to send pre-tax profits at Henlys Group ahead by 120 per cent to £16.1 million in 1994. Sales of medium-sized buses, including the group's Plaxton Pioneer, were up by 63 per cent. A final dividend of 6p almost doubles the total from 4.5p to 8.5p, against a forecast 7.5p, but still well covered out of earnings of 25.9p. Tempus, page 24

CableComms cuts prices

NYNEX CableComms, Britain's second largest cable television and telephone company, dented British Telecom's share price yesterday by cutting its call prices to 25 per cent below those of BT for residential and business customers. The move by CableComms, part of the American NYNEX Corporation, is the latest in the intense battle for customers between cable companies, BT and other telecommunications groups. BT's share price dropped 6p to 376p.

BPB bid in US rejected

NATIONAL Gypsum has rejected a $1.1 billion cash bid by BPB Industries, as too low, and Delcor, a rival suitor, said it might trump BPB's $48.50 per share offer. Delcor owns 19 per cent of National Gypsum. BPB launched its offer after Delcor withdrew a $982 million bid. Delcor now wants the same access to financial information at National Gypsum as BPB, which was allowed to look at National Gypsum's books as part of its evaluation and bid. Tempus, page 24

Scene was set long before entrance of the wild man who bet the bank and lost

The week Barings reaped its own seeds of disaster

Neil Bennett reports from Singapore that the bank had plenty of warning to avoid catastrophe

The crash of Barings was a disaster that could have been avoided. A week after the bank's collapse it is emerging that its senior management had repeated warnings about the irregular activities of Nick Leeson, its rogue trader, and had every opportunity to prevent him from destroying Britain's oldest merchant bank.

Almost from the day he arrived in Singapore in 1992, Mr Leeson gained a reputation as a brilliant but risky trader. He was always standing in the Nikkei futures pit in his familiar blue and gold jacket at the Singapore International Monetary Exchange (Simex) making large trades and doing deals when many of his competitors did not dare.

Simex is not a big market. Although it traded 24 million futures contracts last year it is tiny compared to financial markets like Liffe in London and does not even rate in the top ten. Everybody knows everybody and everybody knew that Nick Leeson was a wild man.

In one of the most polite futures markets on earth Mr Leeson stood head and shoulders above the mainly Asian traders. He was noisier and rougher. After work he and his loyal colleagues would move to Harry's Bar on the old harbour front and shout and jeer until well after dark.

The expatriate community of Simex traders in Singapore is not large — perhaps 40 men in their 20s and 30s help to run their firms' trading operations. In return they are rewarded with an enviable lifestyle. Their firms supply luxury flats, leased cars and massive bonuses for the successful. Among them, Mr Leeson was respected to the point of reverence, but he clashed with the local population. The fact that he was once fined S$200 for mooning at a party shows how different he was from the polite, restrained Singaporeans.

Mr Leeson's presence in Simex makes Barings' description of his job fall apart at once. According to Barings, Mr Leeson was an arbitrage trader. Financial arbitrage involves making tiny profits buying derivatives in one market and simultaneously selling them in another. Mr Leeson was meant to be playing the Japanese stock market futures traded on Simex against those traded on the Osaka stock exchange in Japan.

But to any outside observer with a little knowledge of the futures markets it would have been obvious that Mr Leeson was not doing this at all. Arbitrage traders, or "scalpers", as the American securities firms call them, sit at screens all day watching numbers until they see an opportunity for a small profit. Sometimes they use sophisticated computer models to show them when there is an arbitrage opportunity and they often do not hold a position for more than a few minutes.

The profit on an arbitrage deal is normally a tiny fraction of 1 per cent but it is risk-free trading as long as a dealer matches every buy order with a sell order. But it is not a business for a small bank because the profits are so tiny that large firms stake tens or hundreds of million of dollars every day to make it worthwhile.

Even though it is not large, Simex is dominated by some of the world's largest banks, including Swiss Bank, Barclays and the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, which all have billions of pounds in capital to trade with. Barings, by contrast, was a flyweight punching above its weight with just £300 million in capital to back all its trading operations.

Mr Leeson did not fit the description of an arbitrage dealer in any respect. His behaviour and his team's huge profits make it clear that he was taking large positions in the market all along, gambling on the movement of the Japanese stock market. Barings' internal documents suggest that Mr Leeson's team made $30 million in the first seven months of last year compared with the entire bank's half-year profit of £54.8 million. Huge profits in this market can only mean high risk. This was incontrovertible evidence that Mr Leeson was, literally, betting the bank.

Those profits alerted Barings to send an internal audit team to Singapore which quickly spotted just how potentially damaging the situation was. They were concerned that Mr Leeson was taking risks in his trading and questioned whether he should be in charge of the firm's back office which did all the paperwork for the deals he was carrying out.

For some reason the bank did not act. Perhaps the profits Mr Leeson was making were just too tempting. It is wrong to blame one man for the collapse of Barings: the seeds of its doom were sown long before Mr Leeson ever joined. They grew from the formation of Baring Securities in 1984.

As a middle-ranking merchant bank facing a major consolidation of its core market, Barings had been desperate to find a new business to expand into. The man who provided the answer was Christopher Heath, who founded Baring Securities just when the Japanese futures market was being set up.

Baring Securities was carried along by the exceptional growth of the new market. The traditional merchant bank was staggered by the profits it made from a business that it did not really understand. Barings gave Mr Heath a high degree of autonomy and made him the highest paid employee in Britain for two successive years. "Baring Securities was always a law unto itself," a senior merchant banker said earlier this week.

Ironically, Barings had been trying to bring its securities business closer into line. In 1992 it suffered a half year of heavy losses and realised the risk of the securities business.

Peter Norris was sent from the bank to run the business and was intending to merge it into a single investment banking group later this year. But the securities business continued to do what it did best — trading in the Asian derivatives market — and Barings never really had much control over it.

Like a Shakespearean tragedy, all the elements were now in place for a disaster, but it still could have been prevented at any stage.

The catastrophe began in early January when Mr Leeson started betting that the Japanese Nikkei index would rise after a year in the doldrums. His gamble came unstuck after the Kobe earthquake, which sent Japanese share prices tumbling.

At this point Mr Leeson seems to have acted like any bad gambler: he kept buying more contracts in the market as it fell, hoping that a turn in share prices would allow him to recoup his losses.

> Barings was a flyweight among the big banks, punching above its weight with just £300m in capital to back all of its trading operations

To do that he needed significant amounts of money to pay the margins on the contracts, which should have instantly alerted a well managed firm that something was wrong. But Mr Leeson had every opportunity to conceal his activities since he ran the settlements department, and reported directly to London without answering to anyone in Singapore.

He managed to hide the contracts in a secret account called Error Account number 88888. He then somehow persuaded the bank to arrange huge loans to cover his positions. Baring Securities borrowed 60 billion yen from a syndicate of 20 Japanese banks, allowing Mr Leeson to cover his losses and meet his margin payments. The bank apparently believed his positions were either hedged, or were undertaken for a client.

But how it failed to question the use of such a vast loan is still a mystery.

Finally, two weeks ago, Barings seems to have realised that all was not well. It sent another internal audit team to check the books of the Singapore offices. By Wednesday, Mr Leeson knew he could not bluff his way out any longer, and he vanished, leaving his colleagues and the audit team to discover the full horror of what he had done.

When Peter Baring, the bank's chairman, was telephoned and told the news last Friday morning, there was no time for any recriminations about who had known what when. Instead, he mounted a full-scale rescue operation, and when he knew the extent of the losses he turned to the Bank of England for help. The Bank quickly corralled a group of banks to provide a capital injection to save Barings. But they refused to underwrite Baring's huge open positions in the market.

The public news of Barings' difficulties had made it certain that the Japanese market would fall further when it opened on Monday, and no banker is prepared to write a blank cheque, no matter how badly it is needed.

Ever since Ernst & Young was appointed administrator on Sunday night, the effect of the collapse has been rippling outwards. The City has fretted about how its reputation has been damaged by the Bank's failure to mount a rescue. But the collapse has been felt far more acutely in Singapore, which views it as a serious loss of face for its growing financial services industry.

As a result, the Singapore authorities have acted quickly and efficiently to contain the damage. Barings was immediately suspended from Simex, and most of its positions were closed immediately. The country's six major banks were persuaded to offer a US$300 million loan to protect the market, and the finance ministry has already presented an eleven-point package of measures to tighten regulation in Simex.

Mr Leeson's own damage limitation exercise has been rather less successful. When news of his disappearance broke, most traders believed he would be a long way from his troubles. But it now appears that he was more at home on a trading floor than on the run. Instead of boarding a flight from Kuala Lumpur immediately, he went to ground in the Kota Kinabalu beach resort, which was full of newspapers with his picture in them.

By midweek, he panicked and broke cover, and it was almost inevitable that he would be spotted.

For Simex yesterday, it was almost business as usual. Despite Singapore's bank holiday, the market opened to trade Nikkei futures contracts. Only the empty desks where Mr Leeson and his traders sat are evidence of how the market has been turned upside down in the past week.

International banks prompted by their regulators are already examining the risks they run in the derivatives markets. The Barings crash will make that initiative all the more urgent. But banks in Singapore and other financial markets are already denying that it could happen to them.

Unlike Baring Securities, they make sure that one man cannot hold his firm's destiny in his dealing account.

Smith New Court rises on takeover rumours

THIS week's collapse of Barings merchant bank may have caused turmoil in the Square Mile, but it appears to have done little to curb the enthusiasm of the speculators who remain convinced that a number of large deals are pending.

Top of the list this week has been Smith New Court, one of the few publicly quoted securities houses, fondly referred to as "the brothers" by those City folk whose memories go further back than Britain's withdrawal from the Exchange Rate Mechanism of the European Monetary System.

Shares of Smith New Court have been riding high during the past few days, with the speculators convinced that a bid for the company may be just round the corner. The price climbed 26p to 486p yesterday, for a rise on the week of 40p, as almost 500,000 shares changed hands in a marketplace where rival market-makers will normally only deal in blocks of 5,000 shares at a time.

Word is that Schroders, the merchant bank, would like to bid. The story was made all the more credible by weakness in the Schroders share price, which finished 28p lower at £14.45.

Earlier this week, Rothschild, another merchant bank, was forced to deny claims that it was in talks to sell its 20 per cent stake in SNC. There was no comment from SNC's offices last night.

One lesson that has been learnt from the Barings collapse is that in future securities houses will need bigger capital backing. One way of achieving that might be by merging with rival firms — one reason for the proposed merger earlier this year between SG Warburg and Morgan Stanley, which was aborted after failure to agree a price.

Elsewhere, talk of a counterbid emerging for Wellcome early next week persisted as the price firmed another 6p to £10.41. Wellcome has until 3pm on Wednesday to find a potential suitor. That is the deadline set by the Wellcome Trust, accounting for 40 per cent of the shares, which has already agreed to sell its holding to Glaxo. Glaxo's offer of £10.48 a share values Wellcome at £9 billion. In the past few days, there has been talk that Zeneca may team up with Pfizer in the US to launch a joint bid for Wellcome. Glaxo eased 4p to 659p and Zeneca was 2p firmer at 869p.

BT's shares dipped as CableComms cut its prices

The rest of the equity market ended the week on a flat note, with both equities and gilts losing ground in the face of a weakened dollar. In thin trading, the FT-SE 100 index managed to close above its worst, in spite of another opening fall on Wall Street. It ended 13.1 down at 3,025.1 as 454 million shares were traded. The index finished down 12.6 on the week.

Among the leaders, BT was left nursing a fall of 6p to 376p, with almost 12 million shares traded, after reeling from the news that Nynex Cablecomms, the cable telecoms and television services group, had cut the cost of line rental and call charges by an average 25 per cent. It controls only a small percentage of the British telecoms market, but the move is certain to apply pressure to BT, which has seen its margins come under pressure because of increased competition. Goldman Sachs, the US securities house, has downgraded its recommendation for BT from a buy to a hold.

The English power generating twins finished lower on the day, with National Power losing 5½p at 456½p and PowerGen 2p at 492p. This was in spite of the better-than-expected demand for the Government's proposed sell-off of its remaining 40 per cent stake in the two companies by private investors. More than 1 million of them have applied for shares, covering the issue more than twice. The Government has now increased the number of shares allocated to private investors to 60 per cent of the issue. Dealings in the part-paid shares begin on Monday and are expected to open at a premium of between 10p and 20p.

British Airways saw an increase of almost 6 per cent in the number of passengers carried last month. It was the best performance for the month of February in five years, with the revenue passenger kilometres up 5.9 per cent and the scheduled passenger load factor 1.9 per cent higher at 66 per cent. The shares closed 4p lower at 388p.

MFI Furniture dropped 5p to 110p after evidence of a further erosion in trading margins. Sales during the second half increased 8.5 per cent in the period to November 30, 1994, with sales of the group's French outlets surging 55.4 per cent.

Trading margins were down on the 52.9 per cent, achieved during the first six months. The company blamed raw materials price rises and said sales growth continued to come from products bought externally.

Dawson International tumbled 12½p to 96½p on the back of a profits warning. The company said that its financial performance in the second half was expected to be modestly below expectations.

The water companies made the most of some positive comments from BZW about dividend growth. There were gains for North West, 7p to 534p; Severn Trent, 4p to 520p; South West, 5p to 495p, Southern, 4p to 551p, and Welsh, 8p to 609p.

☐ GILT-EDGED: Prices suffered opening falls, reflecting the renewed weakness in the dollar, which had succeeded in dragging US Treasury bonds lower overnight. Bond prices in Europe were generally lower at the close, with prices at the longer end of the market bearing the brunt of the losses in London.

In the futures pit, the June series of the long gilt finished £7/16 lower at £101 15/16 as a total of 40,000 contracts were completed.

Among conventional issues Treasury 8 per cent 2000 finished six ticks lower at £97 11/16, while at the longer end Treasury 8 per cent 2013 was £13/32 off at £95¼.

☐ NEW YORK: Shares on Wall Street were mixed, reflecting the weakness of the dollar. By midday, the Dow Jones industrial average was down 2.07 points at 3,982.

Alvis, the armoured carmaker, rose 2½p to 58p, cheered by a buy recommendation from Panmure Gordon, the broker, after a meeting with the company. Panmure says the recently announced Indian order is worth £70 million over two years, with a further instalment expected in 1996.

Flat pack at MFI

SIX months ago, MFI spent most of its time worrying about the sluggish pace of recovery in the housing market. Now it has a new problem to contend with — raw material price increases.

This is not something that can be absorbed easily. Raw materials account for about 30 per cent of its costs and many of these are showing double-digit price increases. That will inevitably add several million pounds to the cost base. A rapidly-rising cost base at a time of flat demand is hardly a recipe for healthy earnings growth.

Margins have been squeezed further by a bigger increase in sales of externally-sourced products rather than those manufactured in-house. This has a dramatic effect on profitability. To its credit, MFI is working hard to reverse the trend, but it may find itself running hard to stand still unless consumers start buying more kitchens and bedrooms rather than smaller-ticket items.

Of course, many of its problems could be solved by raising prices to consumers, but it is unclear whether any increases would stick. It certainly could not get away with raising prices across the board which, in truth, is what it really needs to do to mitigate all the margin pressures.

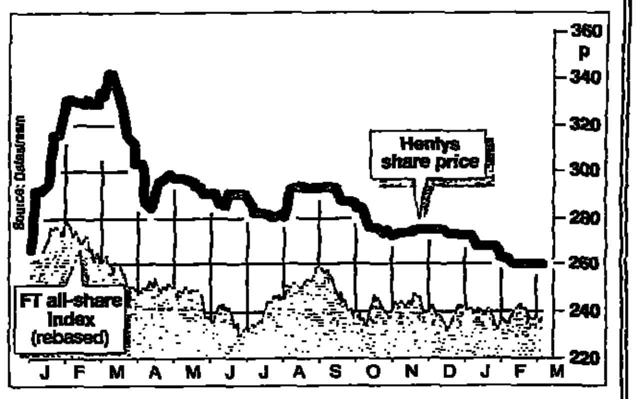
The other problem for MFI is that competitive conditions are sharpening. Magnet is being revived and J Sainsbury's acquisition of Texas, which is the second largest retailer of kitchens, cannot be good news. Until there is evidence of some stabilisation of margins, or a pick-up in the housing recovery, the shares are unlikely to outperform.

Henlys

SHAREHOLDERS who might feel miffed that Henlys' share price has been sitting well below the 280p at which the company raised £26 million last autumn received some consolation yesterday. Not only were the figures rather better than had been hoped. Henlys is exceeding by 11 per cent the dividend forecast made then.

The sterling performance of the coach and bus-making division and the difficult trading in cars is increasingly making a nonsense of the group's classification as a motor distributor. Operating profits more than quadrupled from coaches and buses after a 40 per cent rise in output on the back of full order books but no consequent increase in the cost base. A further 20 per cent rise in output can be looked for this year, while about a fifth of the division's output for 1996 is already locked in after last year's huge orders from Badgerline.

In motors, Henlys is suffering along with the rest of the trade. A refusal to chase too thin margins in the fleet business saw the group's fleet sales 5 per cent lower, against a market 15 per cent up. The aim is to lessen the reliance on the big manufacturers by acquiring a spread of different dealerships, and, even after this week's MCS purchase, Henlys can comfortably spend as much as £30 million on that. The shares sell on 10 times this year's earnings and look cheap, given the prospects for the coach and bus side.



BPB Industries

BPB's share price has been on the slide all week since the announcement of an intention to buy National Gypsum, and the latest developments from North Carolina will not help the company's task in selling the deal to the City.

Gypsum's board has rejected any offer but left the door open, while Delcor, the owner of 20 per cent of the company and the vehicle of the former chairman, now says it might top BPB's $1.12 million offer.

There must be some scepticism here, given Delcor's vested interest in raising the bidding price, but the news does give weight to US analysts' claims that BPB may have to go from the $48.50 a share now envisaged to well over $50 to clinch the deal. There has been some doubt that Gypsum can be justified even at the lower price. While a purchase would clearly enhance earnings from the outset by as much as 15 to 18 per cent over the next couple of good years for US building, the expected downturn thereafter would, if history proves a reliable forecaster, be followed by a vicious price war in plasterboard.

BPB is no stranger to the latter in its home European markets, but the situation here has never been as tough as in the United States. Meanwhile, there is an ominous silence from the third party in the affair, Lafarge, with 10 per cent of Gypsum and also every reason to force the price higher.

Dawson

THERE seems to be no end to the steady stream of bad news that has come out of Dawson International. Long-suffering investors would be forgiven for thinking that last year's expensive withdrawal from its loss-making US fleece and jersey businesses and subsequent £45 million rights issue was the end of it. But now it seems there are further write-offs and provisions to come.

Dawson remains tight-lipped about the scale of these but they could be as much as £20 million or more. That will come as an unwelcome shock to shareholders who only last year had to swallow exceptional provisions of £50 million and a £56 million goodwill write-off. That is a substantial amount for a company with a market capitalisation of about £200 million.

Even if Dawson does shed some of its underperforming operations, it will still be left with some mature low-growth businesses which are struggling under the pressure of rising raw material prices and facing fierce competition. Some radical management changes could be on their way to atone for the latest rash of bad news. Meanwhile the shares, even at these low levels, are a sell.

WEEKEND MONEY

MONEY GUIDE

Investments you can put your trust in

Closer than you think to derivatives

Like it or not, options are not just for City aces.

Caroline Merrell and Sara McConnell report

ADVERTISING ARCHIVES

Derivatives are a gamble that is brought into everyday life through fixed-rate home loans and the guaranteed equity bonds offered by building societies

As the City continues to reel at fresh disclosures about events leading to Barings' ruin this week, you may be quietly congratulating yourself that at least derivatives are one thing that you never let yourself in for. This is where you would be wrong.

If you are one of thousands of investors tempted by guaranteed equity bonds, which guaranteed you your capital back plus stock market growth, you would have been directly exposed to derivatives in the form of futures and options. If you have a fixed-rate mortgage, your lender will be using interest-rate swaps, which are derivatives, to make sure that it is not stuck with a large tranche of fixed-rate money if variable rates move against it.

Could your investments be affected? Weekend Money's special two-page report explains how you are exposed to derivatives and what this means for you.

■ Guaranteed equity bonds: Thousands of investors have put hundreds of millions of pounds into guaranteed growth or equity bonds bonds offered by building societies in the past few years because they seem to offer a cast-iron guarantee. The bonds give a return linked to the rise in the UK stock market over the term. They also usually guarantee to return the original capital to the investor if the market falls. The rise in the index is captured using a derivative.

Societies say that they will continue to offer bonds that use derivatives in spite of the collapse of Barings, which demonstrated the risk of these instruments.

The bonds were aimed at investors wanting to benefit from the rewards of stock-market investment without any of the downside risk.

Societies themselves are not allowed to deal in derivatives. The societies buy a derivatives contract from a third party that will guarantee, at the end of the five-year term, that the society will receive an amount equivalent to the percentage rise in the market. Third parties would usually be a bank or an investment manager and could have included Barings.

However, the societies point out that even if the derivative had been bought through Barings, which now obviously is not in a position to pay over the money at the end of the five years, the societies themselves would have to honour their promise to customers. The money of the society's members should not be at risk because the society will only have to pay back original capital plus whatever return they guaranteed. The commitment is not open-ended.

> 'You have to be very careful about whom you do options with'

Nationwide Building Society has offered a number of these products over the years. Richard Lassen, Nationwide's divisional director, treasury, says that it has never used Barings as a third party and that the society spreads its risk through about 40 institutions.

"You have to be very careful about whom you choose to do options with," Mr Lassen said. "That is always a difficult one. You have to make sure they are financially strong." He points out that, in any case, these guaranteed bonds tend to be sold only in tranches of about £10 million, which is small compared with the society's asset size of £25 billion.

Save & Prosper also offers guaranteed growth products that use derivatives from time to time. S&P uses some third parties for derivatives, as well as in-house facilities. Mike Ryder-Richardson, marketing manager, says: "Derivatives are used as a way of managing risk. The situation with Barings just reveals a lack of control."

Britannia Building Society has sold £150 million worth of guaranteed bonds over the past few years. Trevor Bayley, finance director, says that Britannia has used Barings as the third party in the past.

Mr Bayley says: "We had planned to pull out of the guaranteed bond market anyway. We felt that the market had reached saturation point".

■ Fixed-rate mortgages: If you have a fixed-rate mortgage, your lender has almost certainly used derivatives to manage its interest-rate risk. This poses no risk to you as a borrower.

Your lender wants to guard against two risks. The prevailing variable rate of interest may rise above the fixed rate, forcing the lender to pay out more to savers than it is receiving in interest from borrowers.

Alternatively, the prevailing rate of interest may fall below the fixed rate, making the fixed rate on offer less attractive to borrowers and leaving the lender with fixed-rate money that it has paid for at a specific rate but cannot lend to borrowers at a rate that would make the transaction profitable.

If rates turn against them, banks' or building societies' treasury departments will often swap the fixed rate for a variable-rate loan in the market, so that they are not locked into a fixed rate. The swap itself is called a derivative.

Tamlyn Nall, of Lloyds Bank, says: "Derivatives are just a tool to manage risk, be it interest-rate risk, equity risk or currency risk. We cannot put ourselves in the situation where we are paying our savers, for instance, 15 per cent and only receiving in 9 per cent."

■ Direct derivative investment: Private investors can use certain types of derivatives to enhance their returns; but you should not contemplate doing so unless you are sure you know what you are doing and have an investment portfolio worth at least £100,000.

The London International Financial Futures and Options Exchange says that, in the UK, options are often seen as too difficult for the private investor to understand. Even so, private investors account for about a fifth of options traded.

Most individuals never buy futures, which are riskier than options. If you do want to use options as part of your portfolio, there are two ways.

If you write a "put" option against your investment portfolio, you are obliged to buy a certain amount of stock from a third party, perhaps a bank or an insurance company, when the stock reaches a certain price. If it never reaches that price, you do not have to buy. You have to pay the stockbroker a margin, a gesture of goodwill, for that option. It will typically be 20 per cent of what the total price of the shares will be. You will receive a sum of money, a premium, for the option from the third party. You must have collateral to buy the shares.

If you write a "call" option against your portfolio, a third party pays you a premium for the right to buy some shares at a certain price. The share price may never reach this price, so you may benefit from the premium and keep the shares.

Barings ring-fence stood test

TRUST WATCH

NIGHTMARE became reality this week for nearly 50,000 unitholders in Barings' 20 unit trusts. They woke up on Sunday to the unfolding drama of the merchant bank's collapse and fears over the safety of their money (Robert Miller writes).

Fortunately, they were later to hear that the £1 billion of funds invested in the trusts was ring-fenced — secured — and dealing in the units began again on Thursday. The assets are now in the hands of the trusts' independent trustees.

Philip Warland, director-general of the Association of Unit Trusts and Investment Funds, said: "Every penny in the Barings unit trusts has been accounted for. None of the cash was on deposit with Barings Bank. There is a clear division between the manager of the money and the independent trustee who holds the assets of the trust."

The Barings debacle highlighted another important feature of safe custody. Prudent fund managers, whether of unit trusts, pension funds, charities or investment trusts, keep a small percentage of their portfolios in cash.

Several billion pounds of such funds were on deposit at Barings, when it went into administration. These were immediately frozen.

But for the proposed sale of the bank to ING Group, many depositors could have faced serious losses. Perpetual, which had £2 million from its Money fund on deposit at Barings, immediately promised that it would cover any losses.

Barings' four investment trusts are also involved. Tribune, the largest, has just over £7 million in cash on deposit with the collapsed bank.

The much smaller Stratton trust has £1.8 million on deposit. Whether the money is completely safe very much depends on the terms of the sale.

Both trusts have monthly savings schemes, as does the third trust, Wigmore. Monthly contributions taken just before the bank failed may have been frozen.

Dealings in the shares of the fourth trust, Emerging European, were suspended this week.

INVESTMENT STRATEGY

ANTHONY HARRIS

What goes around, comes around, as the Americans put it. In the early 1990s the financial markets boomed, while the world's real economies were in terrible shape. Now we have financial alarms of every kind, creating shapeless dread in investors.

They may, indeed, be too shell-shocked to notice that the real economy, especially our own, seems to be drifting into a new golden age. Financial trouble could still wreck the real economy; it has happened before. We must simply trust the central bankers, and though some of them may seem a bit gutless, they are neither blind, nor stupid. An accidental recession only too possible; not a slump.

There is now a lull in the financial storm: Mexico, the potential black hole, is in intensive care, though still on the critical list. Those who unwisely trusted Barings can hope to get their money back, thanks to Dutch courage.

Do not rejoice too soon, though: the real cause of financial strain, a worldwide shortage of liquidity, remains a threat to asset values. The Osaka earthquake and the Mexican collapse have both made matters worse, the first by adding $100 billion to world credit demand, the second by imposing huge losses in the US. The Fed has responded as a central bank must, by lending energetically. This is simply filling a vacuum, but already the surviving inflation fogeys have taken fright, which is not good news for bonds. Nerves will remain taut.

Given reasonable management, though, all this is potential good news for the real world of productive work. It offers a virtual guarantee against another damaging boom-bust cycle, and promises low inflation, as two of the Chancellor's Wise Men, Patrick Minford and Tim Congdon, conclude this week.

These two professors are intelligent monetarists, at a time when monetarism is out of fashion, so they have little influence on conventional thinkers; but they produced the two best UK forecasts of 1994. Among the worst were the high priests: in descending order, the Treasury, its nursery, the London Business School, the European Commission and the National Institute.

The wise investor, then, will believe the professors about growth and inflation, noting especially that UK manufacturing growth, responding to export demand, is picking up again, which promises further gains in productivity (especially in the productivity of capital plant), and thus further gains in profit margins. But they will also be aware that official policy, otherwise known as the Ken and Eddie show, will be listening to more conventional voices. They will worry about rising bank lending and input costs, and keep domestic demand unduly depressed. Bad news, until they awake, for retail margins and services.

The fact is that the raw material price correction, which was needed to assure future supplies, is already past its peak. The rise in semi-manufactures such as paper, steel and rubber soon will be. Reports of short supply in these markets, another cause of conventional alarm, reflect stockpiling when prices were rising, which also explains much borrowing. When buyers start to use their stocks, loans will be paid down and spare capacity will appear as if by magic. Don't be frightened by the shadows of the past.

This analysis suggests that equities, especially industrials, offer unusually good value at the moment. Rising US earnings have driven Wall Street indices to a new peak, but London, beset by politics, has yet to reflect the excellent underlying prospects.

Nerves persist, so don't expect a roaring bull market starting on Monday; but as the year passes, the "feel-good" factor should begin to appear at last. How far? This column does not forecast; but Hoare Govett, for one, does and sees the Footsie at 3,500 by the year-end. Not far-fetched, by any means.

An Equitable pension means you can vary contributions – without penalty.

You know exactly what your circumstances are today, and can choose a pension plan to suit them perfectly.

But what about tomorrow? Or next year? Or ten years from now?

What you need is a pension plan which is flexible enough to cope with any changes in your lifestyle – without making you pay a penalty.

That is why you should consider an Equitable personal pension plan. We don't pay commission to third parties for the introduction of new business, and our expenses are kept enviably low. So, you don't have to commit yourself to paying identical contributions each year; they can be increased or reduced to suit you – without penalty.

And if you want to retire earlier than planned, your benefits will be exactly the same as if you'd chosen that date in the first place.

What's more, you have the reassurance of knowing that your pension fund is in the hands of one of the finest investment teams in the U.K.

So, if you'd like further information, by post and by telephone, on a personal pension plan that lives up to its name, call Aylesbury (01296) 26226 or return the coupon below.

Two faces of money management

COMMENT

ANNE ASHWORTH

Personal Finance Editor

The key investment issues of the week both begin with a B, Barings, the merchant bank and Branson, entrepreneur, ardent self-publicist and the newest name in personal equity plans.

The first B stands for the traditional face of money management, for security, superb contacts and stock picking know-how. But, as the bank's deficiencies become daily more apparent, it seems ever more likely that the face of the future will look something like the second B, Mr Branson.

The Barings boys, with their signet rings and hair in the Hugh Grant style, would probably advise you never to entrust your money to a man with a beard. Especially one who never wears suits. Mr Branson, however, will bear them no grudge, being doubtless extremely grateful for the boost that they have given to his latest enterprise.

While arranging the launch of his low-cost personal equity plan, he might have dreamt of the breaking of a scandal, calculated to show the competition in an unflattering light. But even the Virgin marketing machine could not have put together the combination of events that arose at Barings: the failure of the bank and uncertainty surrounding depositors' cash and uninvested pension scheme money. At the same time, the assets of Barings' unit trusts were ringfenced from the collapse, a detail that will give heart to potential investors in the Virgin unit trust-based Pep.

The Virgin Pep venture is determinedly populist and anti-pinstripe. Barings' £500,000-a-year fund managers will be aghast to learn that there are no front-end charges and no bid-offer spread. In case you are worrying about the impact of this on Mr Branson's lifestyle, you will be relieved to learn that there is a 1 per cent annual management charge and an exit fee for those who disinvest. Running a tracker fund which mimics a share index is also relatively simple and inexpensive.

If the Virgin Pep turns the previously disaffected into enthusiastic investors, then it will bring a rush of further price reductions in the unit trust industry. This would be even worse news for the financial services sector, compelled this year to reveal the amounts it deducts from contributions to endowments and pensions. More may now be changing for the Barings boys than the name of the owner of their bank.

On the subject of charges, Mr Branson could perhaps now use his influence with City watchdogs to bring a little more clarity to one part of the new disclosure rules. In a report in this week's Times Money Guide, we collected figures to show which mortgage repayment method (unit trust savings plan, endowment or Pep) was most likely to clear the loan.

We discovered, however, that insurance companies can still conceal some facts, in spite of regulations that now oblige them to tell all. The rate at which charges deducted from the investment will grow can be assumed to be either 0 per cent, 4.5 per cent and 6 per cent. However, the companies are not forced to show this salient point on the key features document given to clients. This is intended to give the whole truth and nothing but, and form the basis of a decision to invest.

This missing information can have an impact on the final return and should be included. Or do life insurers still have something to hide?

Those who take retirement planning seriously will write to the Department of Social Security to ask for a forecast of their basic state pension entitlement. Many, however, never get round to the task, believing either that the information will be unintelligible, or is bound to be correct anyway. But as we report on page 28, women who fail to ask for a forecast may well lose out on Home Responsibilities Protection, which compensates for time spent caring for families. You can leave nothing to chance or the DSS.

Our lesson on buying and selling the future

Derivatives need not disconcert.

Sharon Colback explains all

APPRECIATING the complexities of derivatives may be beyond directors of merchant banks. However, you can begin to understand how they work by reading our guide.

Q Just what are derivatives?

A A derivative is a tradeable contract based on (or derived from) something, such as cotton, gold, a share, a share index or currency. Instead of buying or selling the commodity or share, you trade the derivative and gain, or lose, just as if you owned the commodity or share. You make money if the price rises and lose it if the price falls. The commonest derivatives are futures and options.

Q How are derivatives used?

A To "hedge", or protect, existing holdings against price falls, or as a gamble on price movements.

Q How do futures work?

A A future obliges each party to the contract to fulfil it by some future date. It is an agreement to deliver an asset, like a share, or to pay cash instead.

Q How does an option differ?

A An option is a similar contract to buy or sell, but it allows the choice of fulfilling the contract or letting the option to do so lapse. The seller of an option on a house might say "I agree to sell to you now for an immediate fee, the option to buy this house at £100,000 in three months' time". If the house price had fallen to £90,000 before the option expired, the buyer would not buy it at the option price since he could buy it more cheaply on the open market. He would lose to the seller the original premium he had paid for the option.

Q Where are futures and options traded?

A Via computer link, or, physically, on a trading floor at exchanges such as the London International Financ*ial Futures Exchange (Liffe).* They can also be sold by a seller (a bank, for example) direct to a buyer (an institutional or other client) as an over-the-counter (OTC) trade.

Q What is the role of Liffe?

A Liffe acts as a market place, bringing buyer and seller together. The London Clearing House, owned by the six major UK banks, keeps a daily tally of losses and gains on every contract traded. The party losing from the contract has to make a daily payment to cover the losses. The side gaining has money credited to its account. This is intended to eliminate the possibility of a major default by either party.

Q Does an OTC contract offer that safeguard?

A No. There is considerable concern that if a bank or market-maker writing a contract were to fail, this could damage the financial stability of the other party.

Q Who uses derivatives?

A Professional investment managers use them to hedge against risk or to en*hance performance. A future* can give the same exposure to a market as the underlying share or commodity, but more quickly and at lower initial cost.

Q Do any funds specialise in derivatives?

A Futures and Options Funds and Geared Futures and Options Funds are promoted to rich risk-takers.

Q Can individuals trade directly in derivatives?

A Yes, but it is suitable only for rich, sophisticated investors who know the risk and want to protect portfolios.

Q How are derivatives used as a hedge?

A Someone with a share portfolio mirroring the FT-SE 100 index and fearing a market fall could sell futures contracts equal to the portfolio value. If the index falls, his futures position gains money as his share portfolio loses.

Right from the start, in 1957, Premium Bonds were a winning attraction

Premium Bond bonanza grows

Ernie's millions mean more sales but lower savings rates, says Liz Dolan

Essex man appears to have the Midas touch when it comes to premium bonds. Baroness Thatcher's favourite county is celebrating the creation of its second premium bond millionaire (or millionairess — anonymity is guaranteed for premium bond winners) since the monthly prize was increased to the magic £1 million on April 1 last year — a one in six strike rate equalled only by Surrey.

While promoters of football pools and scratch cards complain of dwindling sales in the face of the new and considerable challenge from the National Lottery, Premium Bonds continue to knock spots off the competition.

According to the latest available figures, sales of the bonds continued to climb in January, by a further £22 million to £137 million. They were National Savings' biggest contributor to government coffers, with £100 million. The next largest sector was National Savings certificates, with £80 million, followed by the National Savings investment account, which contributed £71 million.

The growth in Premium Bond investment means a commensurate increase in the value of total prize money.

This month's winners will share a total jackpot of £20.5 million, compared with £20 million in February. The extra £500,000 is to be shared between winners of £1,000 or less.

While Premium Bond punters make merry, there is still no sign of a rate rise for investors in other National Savings products.

Building societies and banks have boosted returns for their savers in the past month or so, but the Government, which has announced two base rate rises since the Budget, still shows no sign of recommending any increase in National Savings rates to compensate its own loyal investors.

Last month, National Savings appeared to hint that a rate increase may at last be on the way. This week, it was back in more cynical mode.

It commented: "There is no need to increase our rates because people are still buying our products. Maybe the building societies have had to increase theirs because they were less competitive to begin with."

Observers suspect that it is not so much a continuous stream of savers that is preventing National Savings from raising its rates, as the huge, and growing, number of Premium Bond holders keeping the wolf from the Government's door.

National Savings said last month that it was "on course for the assumed contribution to funding for 1994-95 of about £3.5 billion".

If the amount contributed by Premium Bonds continues to grow each month, they could easily contribute the equivalent of nearly half of this year's total contribution in the next financial year. The more they put in, the less effort National Savings has to make to attract new savers.

It is now well over a year since National Savings investors enjoyed an increase in variable savings rates. Fixed rates, which are less expensive to increase, because the new rate applies to new investments only, have remained static for more than six months.

Funds already salted away at the lower fixed rate are pegged at that level for the duration of the life of the bond, which is often five years.

Since the first premium bond was drawn in June 1957, National Savings has given away a grand total of 47.8 million prizes.

The total value of those prizes is £2.82 billion.

C&G set for lively time at meeting

THE Cheltenham & Gloucester Building Society's unscheduled extra meeting, forced on it by dissatisfied members, promises to be a lively affair if the thousands of letters and telephone calls received by Weekend Money are anything to go by.

C&G announced this week that the special meeting will be at Cheltenham Town Hall on Saturday, March 25. On the following Friday, members will be attending the official meeting in London to vote on the proposed £1.8 billion takeover of the society by Lloyds Bank.

The deadline for postal votes is midnight on Sunday, March 26.

The meeting in Cheltenham, which will cost £500,000 to stage, will consider how to enable borrowers, and investors of less than two years' standing, to get some financial benefit from the merger. Both groups can vote, but are currently excluded from receiving the generous bonus payouts offered to other C&G members if the deal goes through.

The meeting will also consider a paper alternative to the proposed cash payments, to enable members to defer capital gains tax liability on bonuses.

Andrew Longhurst, the C&G chief executive, said that the meeting was unnecessary for two reasons. Firstly, C&G's board had already considered the major issues, and, secondly, members would, in any case, have the chance to express their views at the main London meeting.

The minimum bonus for qualifying C&G investors is £513 and the potential maximum is £13,500.

In the C&G transfer documents, mailed to more than a million members late last month, the society said that it had considered all the options open to it and had finally decided that a Lloyds-type deal was the best.

Money for unloved endowment policies

When a cash crisis strikes, a few families can still survive by packing off the silver to Sotheby's. Other, less fortunate, households casting about for something to stave off their creditors, think first of a forgotten endowment policy. But, despite the various outlets that now exist to bring together unwanted policies and investors, about £700 million worth of endowments each year suitable for resale are still surrendered to life insurance companies.

The difference in the size of the cheque can be substantial — more than 30 per cent larger in some cases. Yet it appears that many financial advisers still fail to recommend that clients put their policies into the hands of the Association of Policy Market Maker member companies that buy and sell with-profits endowments and whole-of-life policies.

A policy is suitable for the second-hand market if it has run for at least five years and has a surrender value of £2,000 or more. The procedure is explained in a free Association of Market Makers brochure (copies 0171-739 3949).

Despite falling bonuses, investors apparently continue to see endowments as a secure investment, with many being convinced that bonuses will not be further decreased. They also take comfort that, once added to a policy, bonuses cannot be taken away. New buyers benefit from all the bonuses given from the date of purchase. When the policy matures, they pick up the proceeds, receiving a 11-13 per cent return on their investment.

According to Sammy Alexander of Policy Portfolio, a second-hand policy company, some investors have favourite life offices and are prepared to pay a premium for their policies. One man, for example, pursues Scottish Life policies, but only those taken out before 1968.

Policy Portfolio, at present only a market maker, matching buyer and seller, will, next month, be diversifying into auctioneering, a field where the long-established HE Foster & Cranfield has a monopoly. Policies can sometimes fetch slightly better prices at auction. Policy Portfolio has prepared a free guide, How to Auction an Endowment Policy (copies 0181-343 2900) and will be holding a seminar before each sale.

Peter and Mary Ann Smith say that it was only by luck they noticed that she was missing out on pension

Amazing disappearing pension tracked down

Thousands risk losing rights won when they became mothers, says

Sara McConnell

Between the summer of 1991 and the beginning of 1995, more than a quarter of Mary Ann Smith's state pension vanished. She and her husband, Peter this week finally won their fight to get the pension reinstated, but they fear that thousands of women may be missing out on pension benefits they do not realise they are entitled to.

Four years ago, the Department of Social Security told Mrs Smith that she had made enough National Insurance contributions to qualify for 69 per cent of a basic state pension. This was then £52 a week for a single person, giving her £36.02. If she retired this year on 69 per cent of a full single person's basic state pension of £58.83 a week, she would get £40.60.

In January this year, just months before she was due to retire, the Benefits Agency, which pays out benefits, claimed that she was entitled to only 52 per cent of the full pension of £58.85. A potential weekly pension of £40.60 had shrunk to £30.75.

The reason for the discrepancy soon became apparent. The forecast that Mrs Smith had requested in 1991 included 10 years of home responsibilities protection rights (HRP). Mrs Smith had stopped full-time work to bring up her children, the youngest of whom was 16 in 1989. This meant that she automatically qualified for HRP, introduced in 1978 to reduce the years that people with family responsibilities have to work to get a full state pension (see table). The forecast said: "Our records show that up to and including April 5, 1991, you may be entitled to 10 years of HRP."

However, there was no mention of HRP from the Benefits Agency this year. It was only after repeated visits and telephone calls to the local Benefits Agency office that the Smiths finally managed to get confirmation that Mrs Smith's HRP rights should be included in her pension. But she still does not know how much pension she will receive. Mr Smith said: "Our initial feeling was one of shock. Fortunately, I have savings and a pension of my own." But he added: "I feel aggrieved that we have to fight."

The Benefits Agency demanded proof that Mrs Smith was claiming family allowance (now child benefit) for her children and therefore qualified automatically for HRP. By chance, she still had the last benefit book issued to her, in 1988. However, the Child Benefit Office in Newcastle upon Tyne told the Smiths that it destroyed records after five years. The Benefits Agency confirmed this but said records were still held on the register of the Contributions Agency, which handles National Insurance contributions. No one at the Benefits Agency or the Contributions Agency could explain the discrepancy between Mrs Smith's pension forecast and final pension.

The Benefits Angency said this week: "Any customer who is concerned about discrepancies between a forecast and the final pension awarded or who believes that the pension has been wrongly calculated should apply at their local Benefits Agency office for a pension review."

Mr Smith said that it had been luck that his wife had asked for the forecast, without which she would have had nothing with which to compare the final pension. "I was taking early retirement from teaching and I got a pension forecast," he said. "I suggested my wife did the same."

Mr Smith fears that thousands of women who took time out of jobs to raise children or care for an disabled person may, through Benefits Agency error, be getting a lower pension than they are entitled to.

Lorraine Fletcher, of the Equal Opportunities Commission, agreed: "This is very worrying. Women receiving child benefit should get HRP automatically. Why should [the Smiths] have to prove they are eligible?"

The EOC advises women nearing retirement to get a pension forecast, which can be done at local Benefits Agency offices with form BR19.

HOW HRP WORKS

- The amount of basic state pension you get depends on the National Insurance contributions you make. You have to work roughly 90 per cent of your working life (44 years for women, 49 years for men) to qualify for a full state pension.
- If you have long periods not working at all or not earning enough to pay NI contributions because you are bringing up children or looking after a sick or disabled person, you should be able to claim home responsibilities protection (HRP). This safeguards your pension level by reducing the number of years' work needed to qualify for full benefits.
- You get HRP automatically if you receive child benefit for a child under 16 for the whole tax year up to April 5 1988 or 48 weeks of any subsequent tax year. You also get it automatically if you have been claiming income support for at least 48 weeks in the tax year (the whole tax year for years up to April 5, 1988) so that you can look after a sick or disabled person at home.
- You have to apply for HRP if you are looking after someone receiving attendance allowance, constant attendance allowance or the highest or middle rate of disability living allowance care component or in certain other circumstances. Consult your DSS office.
- From June this year, if you have a complaint about the Contributions Agency, the arm of the Social Security department that collects NI contributions, you can complain to Elizabeth Filkin, the Inland Revenue adjudicator. She will handle problems arising on or after April 1 1995. Contact 0171-930 2292.

Virgin to track young investors

Branson launches telephone-based cut-price Pep to target a wider mix of savers, says Liz Dolan

Richard Branson returns to the City this weekend, six years after buying back all the shares in his Virgin group and storming out of the Square Mile in high dudgeon, railing against short-termism and other stock market sins.

Since scooping up his toys and refusing to play any more in 1989, Mr Branson has had a change of heart. But, this time, he has adopted the guise of aggressor, rather than victim — that of Virgin Direct, price-busting financial services company, rather than Virgin Group, unwilling seductress of hard-nosed stock market dealers.

Speaking on BBC TV's Money Programme last weekend, Mr Branson, one of the UK's wealthiest men, said: "I had a bit of money to invest myself and I started to ask questions and found that quite a lot of that money was going in commissions." He then read an article which said that commissions on a typical pension, with a payout of £300,000 at age 60, amounted to £145,000. He added, with careful understatement: "It seemed that this was an industry possibly run by people who were sort of in the bracket of fat cats and was one to be attacked."

As the well-flagged launch of the new telephone-based company got under way yesterday, more details emerged of its first product, a unit trust Pep which claims to be at least 40 per cent cheaper than the industry average.

The unit trust is a tracker fund. This means its performance mirrors exactly that of the FT-SE-A All-Share index, which covers more than 900 quoted companies in the UK. Tracker funds have outperformed virtually all actively managed funds in the UK growth and income sector over the past five years (see box below).

There are no front-end charges and, effectively, no bid-offer spread either. No spread means that the buying and selling price of the units are identical. At the moment, unit holders in other equity-based funds buy at a higher price than that at which they sell.

The annual management fee is 1 per cent and the exit charge of 0.5 per cent is to cover stamp duty only. Low overheads help to keep charges low — tracker funds cost less to run, and so do telephone-only services.

Norwich Union has contributed £25 million to the fund to act as seedcorn until an equivalent amount can be extracted from, as it were, "real" investors. This will be used to buy holdings in every single one of the components of the All-Share index rather than, as with some tracker funds, what is considered to be a representative sample of stocks.

Over the next few weeks, Virgin will concentrate on attracting as much cash as possible from reasonably sophisticated investors who have still to use their £6,000 Pep allowance before the tax door slams shut on April 6.

Those who invest the full £6,000 get two £30 Virgin Airways vouchers. Annual fees for maximum investors are rebated in the form of extra airline gift vouchers each year until 1998. This offer is open to anyone investing before February 1997.

At the moment, non-Pep investors are virtually ruled out by the imposition of a minimum investment limit of £100,000. But, this minimum will tumble in the new tax year with the introduction of a regular savings plan to bring in younger and first-time investors.

At the same time, the advertising net will be widened to reach people who have never considered investing in equities, or have been deterred by the image of pin-striped sharks intent on blinding them with science while parting them from their hard-earned cash.

This strategy is expected to bring down the age of the average investor from 45-55 to 35-plus, especially as advertising expands into consumer glossies and other mainstream publications. The fact that the Pep can be bought (definitely not sold) over the phone is also expected to appeal to a younger than average age group.

The initial response from the competition is mildly sceptical. "They must have some sort of bid-offer spread," says Richard Farquhar, product performance manager at HSBC, owner of James Capel and Midland Bank. "Our FT-SE 100 tracker fund has one of just 1.3 per cent, and that has to be the narrowest on the market. We don't believe anyone can beat our charging structure."

HSBC has just abolished the 4.175 per cent initial charge on its FT-SE tracker — coincidentally around the time when news of the Virgin Pep began to leak out. Annual charges are 1 per cent, and there is no exit fee. The offer price (the one you buy at) is currently 50.89p, and the bid price (the one you sell at) is 50.23p.

Tony Wood, Virgin's marketing manager, says that such a spread is only necessary if units have to be cancelled when they are cashed in. In an expanding fund such as Virgin's, cashed-in units will simply be sold on to new buyers, he says. There is a potential spread of just over 1 per cent, but only if the trust has to cancel units, "say in three or four years' time". If, as expected, single pricing of all unit trusts comes in later this year, bid-offer spreads will disappear for everyone, in any case.

Virgin Direct plans to introduce a higher income product later in the summer, but this will not necessarily be tied to the original tracker fund.

Next winter sees the launch of its new all-singing, all-dancing life and pensions products. The marketing strategy will once again include low charges and maximum simplicity.

MARTIN BEDDALL

Richard Branson, left, celebrates the launch on HMS Belfast in London with Philip Scott, of Norwich Union, and Rowan Gormley, head of Virgin Direct

See how they ran

FEWER than half the unit trusts actively managed by teams of highly paid professionals in the UK growth and income sector have managed to outperform the FT-SE All-Share index in each of the past seven years, according to figures from Micropal, the unit trust statistics group.

Worse still, in four of those years, fewer than one in three funds beat the index. Over the past five years, only 28 of the 206 funds grew faster than the FTA index.

In the light of these findings, "Where is the logic in sticking all your investment eggs into actively-managed funds?" asks Richard Farquhar, of HSBC Asset Management. He suggests, at the very least, maintaining a core holding in a tracker fund, and then increasing the risk-reward ratio by investing the rest in managed trusts.

Direct lines to better mortgages

TELEPHONE selling is also spreading within the formerly staid sphere of mortage marketing, as lenders compete for the limited amount of home loan business available in a slow housing market.

This week, the Bradford & Bingley Building Society and the Nationwide Building Society have joined the Abbey National, the Bank of Scotland, Direct Line, the Britannia Building Society and the National & Provincial Building Society in the direct market and others will surely follow.

The Bradford & Bingley Mortgages Direct Service will be offering repayment and interest-only loans. But the society has taken the controversial decision to undercut its branches, offering its direct customers a lower rate. Other societies with direct divisions have standard rates for both direct and branch mortgages.

Mortgages Direct borrowers will benefit from a 7.3 per cent variable rate (interest-only or repayment), whereas those who go through a Bradford & Bingley branch must pay 8.45 per cent.

Bradford & Bingley's existing borrowers will be disappointed to learn that they cannot switch to Mortgages Direct. The society says most of these customers would have had the benefit of an introductory offer, such as a discount, or a cash-back deal, when they took out their loan.

Banks vying for house-hunters

NATIONAL Westminster Bank and Lloyds Bank have launched a spring offensive in the mortgage market with ranges of fixed-rate and discounted mortgages, and cash-back schemes.

For first-time buyers, NatWest's range includes a 6.99 per cent loan, with the rate fixed until June 30, 1997. The rate carries an arrangement fee of £100.

For all customers, NatWest offers a 7.49 per cent rate, fixed for two years; an 8.89 per cent rate, fixed for five years; and four loans fixed at 9.99 per cent for ten, 14, 19 and 23 years. For non-NatWest mortgage customers, these rates carry a £250 arrangement fee. NatWest will not charge the arrangement fee for existing borrowers.

The bank is also offering a range of discounted-rate loans, with discounts as high as 4 per cent. The 4 per cent discount is offered until July 31, 1996, for borrowers with more than 25 per cent deposit. Borrowers with less deposit can have a 3 per cent discount.

Lloyds Bank is offering its borrowers up to £6,000 cash back. The cash-back scheme is offered to borrowers who take out its variable-rate loan.

Abbey National has also launched a range of discounted variable-rate mortgages. For those with more than a 25 per cent deposit, the maximum discount they can benefit from is 5.34 per cent on a variable rate of 8.34 per cent. The discount runs until May 31, 1996. This loan is available only to existing Abbey National borrowers who are moving house. For other borrowers with more than 25 per cent deposit, the bank offers a 4.85 per cent discount. For existing and new borrowers who have at least a 5 per cent deposit, the bank offers discounts of between 4.3 per cent and 0.8 per cent for one to five years.

Scottish Amicable is launching a personal equity plan that offers a guaranteed annual income of 7.5 per cent. If you open a further Pep in the next tax year, to make a total £12,000 investment, this rises to 7.65 per cent. The rate is fixed until December 31, 2000, when the full return of the initial investment is guaranteed.

Standard Life is scrapping the initial charge on its Global and Income Advantage unit trusts, a reduction of 5.5 per cent.

Portman Building Society is increasing the rate of return on its instant access account to 5.2 per cent per annum.

THE TIMES WEEKEND MONEY LETTERS

Insurance could provide the answer on pension benefits for ex-wives

From Mr Peter Young

Sir, The solution to the controversial issue of pension benefits for former wives is really quite simple. The problem is that when the man dies, the ex-wife does not receive income of the level received under a divorce settlement.

When I was divorced in 1987, in addition to giving my ex-wife 80 per cent of the house sale proceeds to recognise this matter, it was laid down that I should take out sufficient with-profits life insurance to provide a lump sum for my ex-wife of sufficient size so that when invested the interest generated would equal existing maintenance payments. Although aged 52 at that time and although the maintenance payments were generous, the cost of the appropriate insurance was not excessive. Admittedly it does nor take into account inflation, but then nor do maintenance payments.

Therefore, all that the Government need do is pass a straightforward law that in all separation/divorce settlements the husband should take out appropriate insurance, as in my example.

Yours sincerely,
PETER YOUNG,
16 Oken Court,
Warwick.

Being in control over gas bills

From Mr D. M. Harrison,

Sir, I write with regard to Richard Gilbert's informative article in Weekend Money (February 18). Having had two payments taken in January, one duplicate with an incorrect (larger amount), I wrote to British Gas on January 17.

I have heard nothing further than an acknowledgement, on February 1. However, another incorrect debit was taken on February 3 and I have received a statement, dated February 6, which shows a balance of £185 in credit after the heaviest quarter's usage of the year.

Your readers may be interested to know that the banks are very concerned that the image of the direct-debit system should not be further tarnished and are prepared to back out incorrect debits, credit the customer's account immediately, and recover the money from the supplier.

I would suggest that British Gas customers should make the arrangement with their own bank and then advise British Gas of their action, and the bank charges plus other costs to be credited to their gas account.

MICHAEL HARRISON,
24 Station Road
Beaconsfield
Buckinghamshire.

Terms of reference

From Mr R. R. Curtis

Sir, I recently had cause to take up references on applicants for an assured shorthold tenancy of a property I own; to do this I wrote to the applicants' employers, their existing landlords and their banks. All of the non-banking referees responded promptly and without demure but the banks, Lloyds and Barclays, replied that they needed the applicant's permission before they would provide me with a reference together with an £8 fee. No doubt this "service" to their clients contributes to the major clearing banks' recently declared profits in excess of £1 billion.

Yours faithfully,
R. R. CURTIS,
21 Whitehill Court,
Berkhamstead, Herts.

Trying to push water uphill

From Mr David Lindsay

Sir, Are we not trying to push water uphill? The market will settle the right pay levels if allowed to do so. If it is not, the people we most need will exercise their right of free movement.

What we should, however, be looking at is whether our high earners are paying a fair level of income tax and NICs. Is is right, for example that high earners should be allowed to put a lot more, tax free, into a pension fund than may lower earners (when, for example, the amount of capital gains that we can enjoy, tax free, is the same for all — as is the amount we can put into Peps or Tessas, or borrow on mortgage with tax deductible interest)?

Likewise, is it right that low earners should have to pay a higher proportion of their earnings in NICs than do those earning over the upper earnings limit of £22,360 pa? Were this limit abolished, state pension age could now be equalised at 60 — which is about the age at which most people are now retiring.

Let us not deny high earners their just deserts, but let us ensure they pay their just taxes on their earnings.

Yours faithfully,
DAVID LINDSAY,
36 Orchard Coombe,
Whitchurch Hill,
Reading.

Going over the limit

From Mr Andrew Graham

Sir, At least A. Gerrard was even permitted by the Nationwide Building Society to exceed his overdraft limit (Letters, February 25).

In my case, having refused to pay a monthly direct debit payment of £29.60 on the grounds that it would take me over my overdraft limit, the society "fined" me £25, which had the selfsame effect. I now await the £10 and the increased interest charge. Given the penalty for exceeding an overdraft limit, I cannot fathom why my direct debit could not be paid except that it offered a golden opportunity to make money at a rate of some 14 per cent per day. I suspect too that the computer has now taken over and makes all the "decisions", while the human element simply sign the letters as they appear automatically.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW GRAHAM,
Risborough House,
Pond Hill Road,
Shorncliffe, Kent.

UK nationals are free to pick anywhere within the European economic area

Working overseas — if fortune calls

Opportunities abroad are rising — not just in the Far East, says Ian Hunter

Nick Leeson, Barings' rogue broker, was not alone. Many UK nationals have chosen to work overseas, but not all have made such a name for themselves.

Opportunities overseas are on the increase, and not just in Singapore. UK nationals can work freely anywhere within the European economic area (EEA). This zone consists of the 15 EU states, together with Norway and Iceland. Workers may still, however, have to register their presence with the police on arrival.

Employment in the United States is more regulated. Many UK nationals enter under the L1 visa that permits the temporary transfer of specialised employees to the United States for up to two years. Such employees must normally have worked for their employer for at least a year prior to transfer.

Another route into the US is by way of the prized green card. This document confers residency and the right to work. Green card applicants usually need to show that they have good employment prospects, and if possible, family ties in America. Sponsorship by both a prospective employer and a US citizen is usually required.

Australia is another popular destination. Temporary work visas are available. The young have added advantages. Those between 18 and 25 may apply for a working holiday visa, costing £71. Applicants must produce a return air ticket together with funds of at least £2,000. The maximum stay allowed is one year, during which time the applicant must not work for any one employer for more than three months. Those between the ages of 26 and 30 are also eligible for this category of visa under certain conditions.

Careful tax planning is also a must. Such employees fall into two categories for tax purposes — resident and non-resident. If Mr Leeson had worked full-time abroad for at least a complete tax year (April 6 in one year and April 5 in the following year) and had carried out all his duties abroad he would not be treated as resident for tax purposes, provided he did not visit the UK for more than an average of 91 days in any year. If Mr Leeson had satisfied these conditions he would not be liable for UK tax on his earnings.

Alternatively, if Mr Leeson was not out of the UK for a complete tax year, he would be able to take advantage of an alternative tax concession — the 365-day relief. This is available to those who remain resident in the UK for tax purposes, but are out of the country for 365 days.

Within this period, people can spend up to a sixth of their time in the UK, subject to a maximum of 62 consecutive days on any one visit. Anyone who qualified for this relief and returned home permanently before the 365-day qualifying period was over, would lose the relief.

UK tax is still payable on earnings from other sources, such as UK share dividends, or building society interest. However, unlike those who are treated as being non-resident, taxpayers on 365-day relief can set their personal allowances against such tax.

Those working abroad in a large number of countries, including the US, Australia and Singapore have an additional advantage.

The UK has entered into a number of double-tax treaties. Under these arrangements, each country agrees to give up, or reduce, its tax in certain circumstances, to avoid individuals having to pay tax on earnings in two different countries. Even where no treaty exists, relief from UK tax will generally be available on any foreign tax paid by UK residents.

Under the dual treaty arrangement, individuals who are sent to America by a UK employer, with no permanent home there are exempt from paying federal taxes, provided they do not stay for more than 183 days in the relevant US tax year (January 1-December 31). The exemption applies only to federal taxes, not state dues.

The payment of tax is not the only area of international agreement. Many countries including members of the EEA, Australia and the United States, have entered into reciprocal agreements regarding social security contributions and benefits. The UK-US Social Security Treaty provides that those working in the United States for a UK employer may continue to pay only UK contributions, provided the stay does not exceed five years.

Those working in Australia can continue to make contributions for up to three years after leaving in order to safeguard entitlements, such as the basic retirement pension. UK employers must pay National Insurance contributions, in respect of employees during the first year of a secondment to Australia.

GUARANTEED GROWTH BOND
Puts your savings on a higher plane

When you've saved hard to build up a lump sum, you want to make sure that your money works hard to deliver the highest possible returns.

Higher yielding investments are all very well, but they always seem so risky. And if there's one thing you can't afford, it's to lose everything on promised gains that never materialise.

That's why we have created the Guaranteed Growth Bond.

It'll give you a minimum growth of 40% after 5 1/2 years. And there is always the chance that your Guaranteed Growth Bond will yield substantially more. If the stock market rises over the 5 1/2 year period, you'll get a valuable cash bonus on 20% of your capital.

To put your savings on a higher plane all we ask is that you invest a minimum of £2,500 with us.

Williamson counts Festival blessings

Richard Evans meets a talented Irish rider relieved to be part of the Cheltenham scene

TONY EDENDEN

Williamson has a strong book of rides, including Alderbrook and Master Oats, at the Cheltenham Festival

Norman Williamson had just ridden his 84th winner of the season but instead of enjoying the warm glow of satisfaction his blood-drained features gave a hint of the anguish he was enduring.

A year ago today this talented Irish jockey received a controversial four-day riding ban at Doncaster which prevented him from participating in the Cheltenham Festival. The suspension cost him an estimated £17,000 in prize-money and riding fees and, just as important, the glory and honour of winning the Smurfit Champion Hurdle on Flakey Dove and the Sun Alliance Chase with Monsieur Le Cure.

As a worried Williamson waited in Taunton's spartan weighing room earlier this week while stewards found him guilty of careless riding and contemplated a suitable punishment, he immediately thought the unthinkable — missing Cheltenham for the second year running.

"Straight away, I thought this is it. One of the first things that went through my mind while standing there was who would ride Master Oats [the Gold Cup favourite]." Then there was Alderbrook, his fancied mount in the Champion Hurdle, Morceli, the favourite for the Arkle Chase, the improved Mudahim in the Stayers' Hurdle, the promising Simple Arithmetic and Betty's Boy in two novice events. An outstanding book of rides which was suddenly under threat.

To make matters worse for Williamson, he — and virtually everyone else at Taunton — thought he was blameless in an incident where another horse and jockey fell after colliding with the back of Williamson's mount halfway through the final race on Wednesday's card.

"I didn't know anything had happened, that's the sad part. I didn't know yer man had fallen," he said. "When I was cantering back I heard 'stewards' inquiry' and I thought it could not be me because I won far enough. The next thing they said I was wanted in the stewards' room and I was standing in front of them before I knew what had happened."

Ironically, the painful lesson of Doncaster 12 months ago had been in the back of Williamson's mind long before he received a letter last Monday, sent to all riders from the Jockeys' Association, reminding him to be extra careful with Cheltenham drawing nearer. As the seconds ticked by while the Taunton stewards deliberated, the popularly styled "Stormin'" Norman looked a pale shadow of his nickname.

In the end, he received a three-day ban. To most observers, that alone was harsh but at least Williamson's worst fears were averted. Provided he and his weighing room colleagues can stay out of trouble today and on Monday the threat of being suspended during Cheltenham will have passed.

The likeable lad from a Co Cork farming family learnt his craft, just like Adrian Maguire, on Ireland's highly competitive pony circuit where he was champion three times, including one year when he rode a phenomenal 65 winners. After spending 3½ beneficial years with Dermot Weld, he moved on to the point-to-point scene before being lured to England to become stable jockey for John Edwards.

By the time he left the Ross-on-Wye trainer to join Kim Bailey two years ago, Williamson had become the finished article: a stylish and patient horseman with deceptive strength in a finish. His reward last season was a first century of winners, but more important targets remain unfulfilled.

Although he is chasing Maguire and Richard Dunwoody hard in the title race, for any jump jockey Cheltenham is the most important three days of their year, not just because of the prize-money on offer but due to the enormous prestige at stake. "You don't punch the air after going by the line at Cheltenham because of the money," he said.

The nearest Williamson came to imitating Jonjo O'Neill's Dawn Run salute was on his first Festival ride in 1989 when he was pipped in the Kim Muir by Cool Ground, ridden by Anthony Tory, the man he subsequently replaced at Bailey's yard. However, this year could see the articulate 26-year-old deliver his own knockout blows.

Nobody has been more surprised than Williamson at the giant advance made by Master Oats. A year ago the jockey urged Kim Bailey to prepare him for this season's Welsh National "and sure enough he won it, but I didn't think he would win it the way he did."

Even so, he was still not convinced about his Gold Cup potential until Master Oats went to Cheltenham in January and showed he was more than a resolute stayer by handing out a 15-length thrashing to such notable talents as Barton Bank, Young Hustler and Dubacilla. "He has improved speed wise. He was very, very one paced but he has definitely stepped up a gear."

"He's never met top quality three-mile chasers on good ground and that is why I think his price for the Gold Cup is absolutely crazy. He's favourite because he's the only horse that has done nothing wrong, rather than prove he has class. If the ground is soft he will have a favourite's chance, but if it dries out I would see a lot of dangers."

Alderbrook's conversion from a 50-1 long-shot to 5-1 third favourite for the Champion Hurdle after a decisive victory in Wincanton's Kingwell Hurdle only served to confirm the home work of the group two Flat winner. "The last day I schooled him I had never been so quick over hurdles in my life; he literally ran away with me. He will need everything to go right on the day but, hopefully, he has the class to take me there."

Morceli is as short as 2-1 for the Arkle but Williamson believes Howard Johnson's novice chaser has an outstanding chance. "If he jumps the way he has twice done so far, he has to take all the beating. I am very hopeful."

He added: "There are a lot of fancied rides. I'm not nervous and I am looking forward to it but at the same time I would like to have it out of the way as well. You would like to know what is going to happen." Perhaps, most important of all, Williamson would like to know Cheltenham will happen for him this year.

Kentish Piper to call tune

TODAY'S RACES ON TELEVISION

NEWBURY
BBC1

1.00: A tricky opener with the useful Dreams End making a belated seasonal debut having switched yards and Barna Boy returning to hurdles after not taking to fences. Soothfast is also having his first run this term but won on his seasonal debut in heavy ground last January off a handicap mark only 4lb lower. With Jim Old's string in good form, he can oblige. Barna Boy is an obvious threat provided the experience over fences has not dented his confidence.

1.30: With Bibendum and Gnome's Tycoon both due to run at Doncaster (they would have a good chance here) this is a disappointing race. Givus A Buck has not raced for three months having fallen and been pulled up on his last two outings; Plastic Spaceage loves the ground but has not been chasing for two seasons and Rough Quest is without a win for three years. Which leaves Kentish Piper, who may have needed the race at Nottingham a fortnight ago after a three-month lay-off. Nick Gaselee's mud lover goes particularly well here.

2.00: Despite the numbers, few have a winning chance. Hops And Pops thrashed a useful field of novices last week but will need to improve further to win here. Island Jewel is a tough handicapper who will relish the conditions and still looks reasonably treated despite three wins this season. High Grade is untrustworthy.

DONCASTER
C4

2.25: Jimmy The Gillie boasts the best form having chased home stablemate Nakir at Aintree last April. Although Simon Christian's novice has been well below his best this term, he should still be up to beating a group of modest rivals. If Easthorpe is rerouted here because of Newbury being cancelled he would be preferred.

3.00: The front-running Brambleberry will not be able to dominate this field as easily as he did against four rivals at Haydock last week. Mr Confusion and Thornton Gate both won within half an hour of each other over the same distance at Edinburgh a month ago but Thornton Gate recorded a time more than three seconds faster. Mr Confusion's victory has been boosted by the success of third placed Cool Luke at Wetherby on Wednesday, but Peter Easterby's runner is marginally preferred.

3.35: Gnome's Tycoon was flattered by his proximity to Rouyan at Sandown last month but ran well nevertheless after a lengthy lay-off. He will be able to lay up with the strong pace likely to be set by the front-running Bibendum and Sir Peter Lely and has sound prospects. However, Boarding School is really getting the hang of chasing having won his last four completed starts and his light weight could be crucial in the closing stages.

4.05: Avro Anson has not been seen since running a rare bad race at Newbury three months ago but goes well after a break and should have his favoured good ground. Adrian Maguire is an interesting booking for Dominant Serenade who boasts decent form but a poor strike rate. Gospel is best of the rest.

4.40: Strath Royal will be suited by the longer trip having just failed to peg back Bibendum over 2½ miles at Nottingham but would prefer softer ground. The same remark applies to Clyde Ranger who was found to have a cold after a disappointing last run. David Nicholson should have Meleagris fit despite a long lay-off and the form of his last success has worked out well with five horses behind him all winning since.

Olazábal limps on in Rocca's shadow

From Mel Webb in Huelva, Spain

THE frowns were spreading hither and yon: gloom and despondency were etched on the sponsors' faces. They were about to lose their star attraction in the Turespaña Andalucian Open golf tournament and they wondered if it had all been worth it. Then, the waters suddenly and miraculously parted and all was well again. José Maria Olazábal would be at Islantilla for the weekend.

Olazábal was less hampered yesterday by the foot that is still recuperating from an operation a month ago, but, although he would walk better to his ball than on the day before, the shots that he hit when he got there were not in the same street.

Olazábal had a 72 when limping on Thursday and turned in a 76 yesterday. "I was playing well, too," he said slightly incredulously. "I played a lot better than I scored. I just couldn't believe the score I was shooting out there.

"My foot was much better today. It felt good when I woke up this morning and, although it still hurt a bit, the improvement from yesterday was dramatic." Beware the injured golfer, they say. There is nothing like a bit of good, old-fashioned pain to keep the mind on the job.

For all the improvement in his state of health, Olazábal still finished the day 12 shots behind Costantino Rocca. A course record of 65 for a total of 136, six under par, put the Italian Ryder Cup player three shots clear of his nearest pursuers, Alexander Cejka, of Germany, Des Smyth, the first-round leader, and David Carter, who won the European Tour qualifying school last autumn.

The hole which almost ended Olazábal's continued presence in the tournament was the 7th, where he blocked his drive to the right into bushes and finished with a triple-bogey seven. He had already three-putted the 2nd and 4th for bogeys and he took 40 to play the front nine, supposedly the easier half.

Like most of his rivals, he dropped a shot at the bizarrely difficult 13th and also bogeyed the 15th, when he hit a two-iron into a bunker and failed to get up and down. He knew, at that point, that he would have to birdie one of the remaining three holes to stay in the tournament, and the closing holes at Islantilla do not yield shots easily. The pressure was mounting on him — and on the men in suits in the sponsors' tent. He duly rolled in a three-footer at the 16th.

Rocca, meanwhile, was rolling in a mile of putts — he took only 12 of them in the last ten holes, including eight singles. Rocca would be the first to admit that he is a streaky putter, but this time the streak was golden. Perhaps the change in image he is cultivating — there is evidence of what may well turn out to be a moustache lurking on his upper lip — will extend to his putting.

"When I was playing practice rounds, I thought if somebody had offered me level par for the tournament, I would have taken it," he said. "The front nine here is playable, but the back nine is very difficult." Although not when you are sinking putts from here to eternity.

It was a flawless round, containing three birdies on each half, but, although saving shots on the 4th and 8th, he did not really warm up on the greens until the 9th, which he also birdied. From then on, he was irresistible.

He holed from 10ft on the 11th, 12ft on the 12th and 18ft on the 17th for birdies, and, long before the end, the ball looked as if it was running into the hole on rails. If he keeps this up over the weekend, he will surely win. The one thing he must absolutely not do is shave off his moustache.

Nick Faldo, with his putter working well, scored 67 in the first round of the Doral Open in Miami on Thursday, a round which left him two strokes behind the leaders — Scott Verplank, Davis Love III and Steve Lowery, of the United States. Colin Montgomerie had a 72, but that still put him two strokes ahead of Ernie Els, the US Open champion, and three in front of David Feherty.

Cowan, a bright prospect, was beaten in Bracknell final

Petchey enhances Davis Cup hopes

By Stuart Jones, Tennis Correspondent

FOR the second successive year, Mark Petchey's achievement on Mexican clay has brightened Great Britain's outlook in the Davis Cup. He, and especially David Lloyd, the new captain for the forthcoming tie in Slovakia, will be trusting that it is not another false dawn.

In the absence of Jeremy Bates, who has retired from national duty, Petchey will doubtless bear the principal responsibility in Bratislava at the end of next month. Defeat would lead to Britain becoming embroiled in a play-off to avoid being relegated from, effectively, the third division.

As the tie is to be staged on clay, the British team was not favoured to win, but Petchey altered the odds on Thursday night. In Mexico City, he beat Alberto Berasategui, the second best clay-court player in the world, in straight sets to reach the quarter-final.

His defeat of Berasategui is more remarkable than his wins last year over two other members of the top ten. Michael Stich, the temperamental German, can capitulate against anybody, and Michael Chang, of the United States, has been dismissed by Andre Agassi as a player "who runs for a living".

Bates, the Britain No 1, has compared competing against Berasategui on clay to "playing against a brick wall". Only Sergi Bruguera, his Spanish compatriot who beat him in the French Open final last year, is more formidable on the slow surface.

Petchey provided an equally opportune fillip last year. In the same tournament in Mexico City, he took Thomas Muster, the defending champion and another acknowledged clay-court specialist, to four sets before losing in the semi-final.

Britain, under Tony Pickard, set off for the ensuing Davis Cup tie on Portuguese clay with substantial optimism, but Petchey, appearing to be a novice, was twice beaten in straight sets by lower-ranked opponents. The team lost 4-1 and was forced into a relegation play-off against Romania.

Petchey, though on home grass, fared no better then and extended his sequence of failure in singles rubbers. For all of his individual success (he is on the verge of re-entering the world top 100), he has not won on his own for his country since his debut in 1991.

Barry Cowan, 20, a Lancastrian, provided further encouragement for the national game in reaching the final of the satellite tournament at Bracknell. In the first round of Wimbledon last year, he was drawn against, and took a set off, Bruguera.

Yesterday, he was forced to play to his relative weaknesses, from the baseline and on his backhand, by Thomas Johansson, the No 1 seed. The Swede won 6-4, 6-2 to capture his third title within a month. Today, Cowan leaves for his next tournament, coincidentally in Mexico.

Umpire's threat to Downing headship

DOWNING remained clear in the men's first division of the Cambridge University Lent races, but were threatened by Ed Davison, the senior umpire and university boat club secretary, with loss of the headship today if their cox again drops the bung early. Sidney Sussex, who started sixth in the second division, climbed into the first division after bumping Selwyn and Clare. Emmanuel stayed in pole position in the women's divisions, finishing four lengths ahead of Trinity Hall. Behind them, Queens' caught Jesus at Ditton.

Weld books Dwyer for title hope

MARK DWYER will ride Fortune And Fame in the Smurfit Champion Hurdle at Cheltenham a week on Tuesday. The freelance rider attempts to repeat last year's triumph in the race with Flakey Dove.

"I was told I'd got the ride in a phone call from Dermot Weld's office last night and I'm delighted," Dwyer said yesterday.

Dwyer partnered Fortune And Fame — owned by the big-race sponsor, Dr Michael Smurfit — to victory in the Irish Champion Hurdle at Fairyhouse in January. "I was delighted with him that day," Dwyer said. "Connections were also very pleased with him. They felt he would improve quite a bit for the run."

Dwyer will partner Fortune And Fame in a work-out before racing at Leopardstown tomorrow.

Tim Forster has paid tribute to the 1980 Grand National winner, Ben Nevis, 27, who was put down in Maryland earlier this week after a bout of colic.

Forster said: "I never compare my National winners but Ben Nevis was a very good horse the day he won it — he won in a canter and could have gone round again. He had a happy retirement as he didn't run again after the National."

Ben Nevis was a leading jumper in the United States when trained by Jonathan Sheppard and won the Maryland Hunt Cup twice.

Sent to Britain in 1979, he gave Forster the second of three successes in the Grand National the following year when, as a 40-1 chance, he was ridden by his owner, Charlie Fenwick, to beat Rough And Tumble by 20 lengths.

The death of Ben Nevis comes six weeks after that of Rubstic, who won the 1979 National — in which Ben Nevis unseated his rider.

SHEEHAN on BRIDGE

It is always enjoyable to see a top-class player get the worst of an encounter with someone less experienced. The hand below was played in the team event at the Malta Bridge Festival.

Contract: Four Spades Doubled, by South. Lead: six of hearts

(1) Nowadays out-and-out psyches like this are rare. When I held the hand at the other table I opened a weak Two Hearts.
(2) One Spade is a reasonable alternative. If your partner cannot bid over One Spade you are unlikely to have game.
(3) Technically speaking, redouble is best for the time being. It would have led to a worse result.
(4) More or less forced.
(5) East probably thought the hand belonged to her side, and that North-South were sacrificing.

Zia took the first heart with the ace, drew trumps and cashed the three top diamonds. He then exited with his second heart.

East won the heart; at this point many players would not have resisted the temptation of playing ace, king and another club. However East could see that her side needed three club tricks to beat the contract, so she switched to a low club.

From the declarer's point of view the best odds were to play East for the jack of clubs rather than both the ace and king, so Zia played low and the defence took three club tricks.

This left Zia with oeuf sur visage, and gave his teammates (Ata, Willie Coyle and me) some innocent pleasure.

Dragons Fire

In the Linares tournament in Spain, traditionally the strongest annual tournament in the world, Nigel Short suffered a severe defeat in round two.

His opponent, the Bulgarian grandmaster Veselin Topalov, employed the sharp Dragon variation of the Sicilian Defence to overrun Short's position.

Mindscape

In the Mindscape International tournament in San Francisco the tournament veteran 63-year-old Viktor Korchnoi has seized the sole lead with two rounds to go.

Curiously, he employed a dragon system, with colours reversed, to inflict defeat on the American prodigy Josh Waitzkin.

Liverpool offer test of a dramatic recovery in race for Premiership prize

Keegan revives Newcastle's challenge

Louise Taylor believes a half-time team talk may be a turning point on Tyneside this season

Beardsley, left, and Venison have reinforced the link between the dominant Liverpool of old and the resurgence of the new Newcastle

LAST Saturday, at about 3.45pm, Kevin Keegan decided that the time had come to "have words" with Newcastle United's players. With his side drawing 1-1 with Aston Villa, the Newcastle manager devoted half-time to delivering some home truths. "I told them if they had given up any hope of winning the championship, just carrying on as in the first half would be fine, but that if they still wanted to challenge for it, their act needed to be got together — and fast," he said.

Presumably presented with a rather less politely paraphrased version of this message, the Newcastle players rose to the challenge. Forty-five minutes later, Villa trudged off the pitch at St James' Park as 3-1 losers: a result that, should Newcastle win at Liverpool this afternoon, may come to be seen as a defining moment in Newcastle's season.

For the first time in months, talk of catching Manchester United and Blackburn Rovers at the top of the FA Carling Premiership is no longer taboo at the club's tree-lined training ground, set in undulating countryside outside Durham. Indeed, the chat among executive supporters flying back from a convincing midweek win at Ipswich drifted towards a possible Newcastle league and FA Cup double. It may have been champagne-induced optimism, but Tyneside bookmakers are accepting such bets. Keegan's team is back on Merseyside for an FA Cup quarter-final against Everton tomorrow week.

Six points behind Manchester United and nine adrift of Blackburn Rovers, they still have some considerable catching up to do, but, if not quite placing Newcastle on the cusp of glory, victory at Anfield would provoke alarm in the North West.

Mathematically championship contenders themselves, Liverpool are looking forward to putting four old boys in their place. Keegan, Terry McDermott, his assistant, and the two of the team's key figures, Barry Venison and Peter Beardsley, all return to the ground where they spent formative seasons.

One of the recurring themes of Keegan's managerial regime at St James' Park has, in fact, been his desire to turn Newcastle into "a club like the Liverpool I played for". References to Bill Shankly punctuate his press conferences and Keegan has even recreated a Newcastle "boot room", comprising McDermott, Derek Fazakerley, the first team coach, and Arthur Cox, another of his mentors.

Beardsley, too, has a special place in Keegan's heart. He scored Newcastle's second-half goals against Villa, both after mesmerising dribbles, and the manager said of his favourite striker: "Of all the players in the world, only Peter could have scored that last goal." Nevertheless, Keegan is sufficiently hard-headed to have had "a few private words" with Beardsley during that decisive half-time talk. "The trouble with Peter is that sometimes he's so enthusiastic that he wants to do everything, to chase the ball the ball boys should be looking after," Keegan said.

Liverpool season ticket-holders would have appreciated a bit more of this eager-beavering attitude from some sullen players disaffected during the time of Graeme Souness's management. Even now, Roy Evans, his successor, could still do worse than use Beardsley as a role model.

Nobody could ever accuse Venison of an apathetic approach, but Anfield regulars did question his ability during the days when he was in and out of their team at right back. Re-invented by Keegan — who bought him for a modest £250,000 — as an anchoring midfielder or central defender, Venison is arguably Newcastle's player of the season and a recently-capped England international operating just in front of the back four.

Keegan has never had trouble expressing his views, whether analysing for television or when talking about his beloved Newcastle, but, just lately, a critical note has crept into his assessments. Where once this most fiercely protective of managers refused to countenance any criticism of his protégés, a degree of blame is now placed squarely on individuals' shoulders. Last week, it was Steve Howey's turn, the central defender being fined for conceding a needless booking.

Still far from afraid to dispense lavish praise — he repeatedly describes Keith Gillespie as Britain's most exciting young player in years — Keegan chastises too. Accordingly, he "gets at" Gillespie when the young winger sometimes fails to "look up and play the early cross".

Such minor quibbles are merely intended to smooth the rough edges Keegan the player once worked so hard to erase from his own game: to speed the sort of improvements that resulted in his becoming an England international rather than simply a solid club player.

They might just make the difference between Newcastle winning a trophy or settling for a glamorous loser's role come May.

Football finds its soul with foreign aid

ROB HUGHES

Weekend View

In sport, it is better to trust what you see rather than what someone tells you. The week began with John Morris, the secretary of the British Boxing Board of Control, wretchedly trying to compare the risks of pugilism to football. He, the defender of the indefensible, was speaking on Sunday morning after another of his board's licensed bouts of brain beating had put a healthy individual onto a life-support system.

"My lad is playing football today," Morris said. "He takes that risk, including, by the way, head injuries. We know the dangers, they are there."

Football is guilty of a lot of things, but intentionally inflicting harm to the brain is not one of them. By Tuesday, however, Morris appeared to have a point. There is, indeed, the risk of cerebral damage if one goes to Bruges without a ticket and comes under the cosh of the Belgian gendarmerie.

By Wednesday, at last, the soul of the game began to strike blows for its good name and nature. Down at The Dell, Southampton and Tottenham Hotspur put on 120 minutes of the most bewitching football drama. For unpredictability, it must have rivalled anything down the century and more of FA Cup lore. Who will forget the night of Ronnie Rosenthal, coming on not fully fit after knee injury, his side two goals down . . . and the Israeli scoring three times, three left-footed goals from angles or distances that defied logic.

This former soldier, 31, talks fast and with a degree of charm, but he could not explain, for nobody could, the intuition that impels a man to ignore team-mates, to shoot for goal quicker than it takes the brain to form an idea and transmit the message to the feet. This hero at The Dell had come all the way along the road from Maccabi Haifa to White Hart Lane, to hear Gerry Francis, his manager, assert: "We've just had a little bar mitzvah dance in the dressing-room."

Words and pictures out of synch: if anything could transcend the hat-trick, it was the sportsmanship with which Southampton supporters in their thousands stood to applaud the conqueror of their team. What an old-fashioned night of beauty to weigh against the sores of the national game.

Then came Thursday, a snowstorm over Highbury, and another beguiling foreigner. Guy Roux, 56, is the coach of A J Auxerre, and his team had matched Arsenal with just enough power to negate the Cup Winners' Cup holders; but the French team contained genuinely gifted players, too. Where do they come from? "I am not a man of impatient nature," Roux said, smiling. "I work and work until something comes at the end of it."

For 33 years, he has toiled on behalf of A J Auxerre. The initials refer to the youth on which the club is founded, and it was interesting, to put it mildly, to sit with Roux on the day that the Darlington manager became the 35th club coach in England to lose his job this season — as well as the 21st former Darlington manager in the time that Roux has maintained his position at Auxerre.

Maybe that is why Darlington flounder. Roux, having talked his way into the job of running the club single-handed, for £60 a week, in 1961, insisted that there would be a philosophy of patience, and his own school where he would personally groom players. These have included Eric Cantona and Basile Boli, players subsequently sold for millions of pounds.

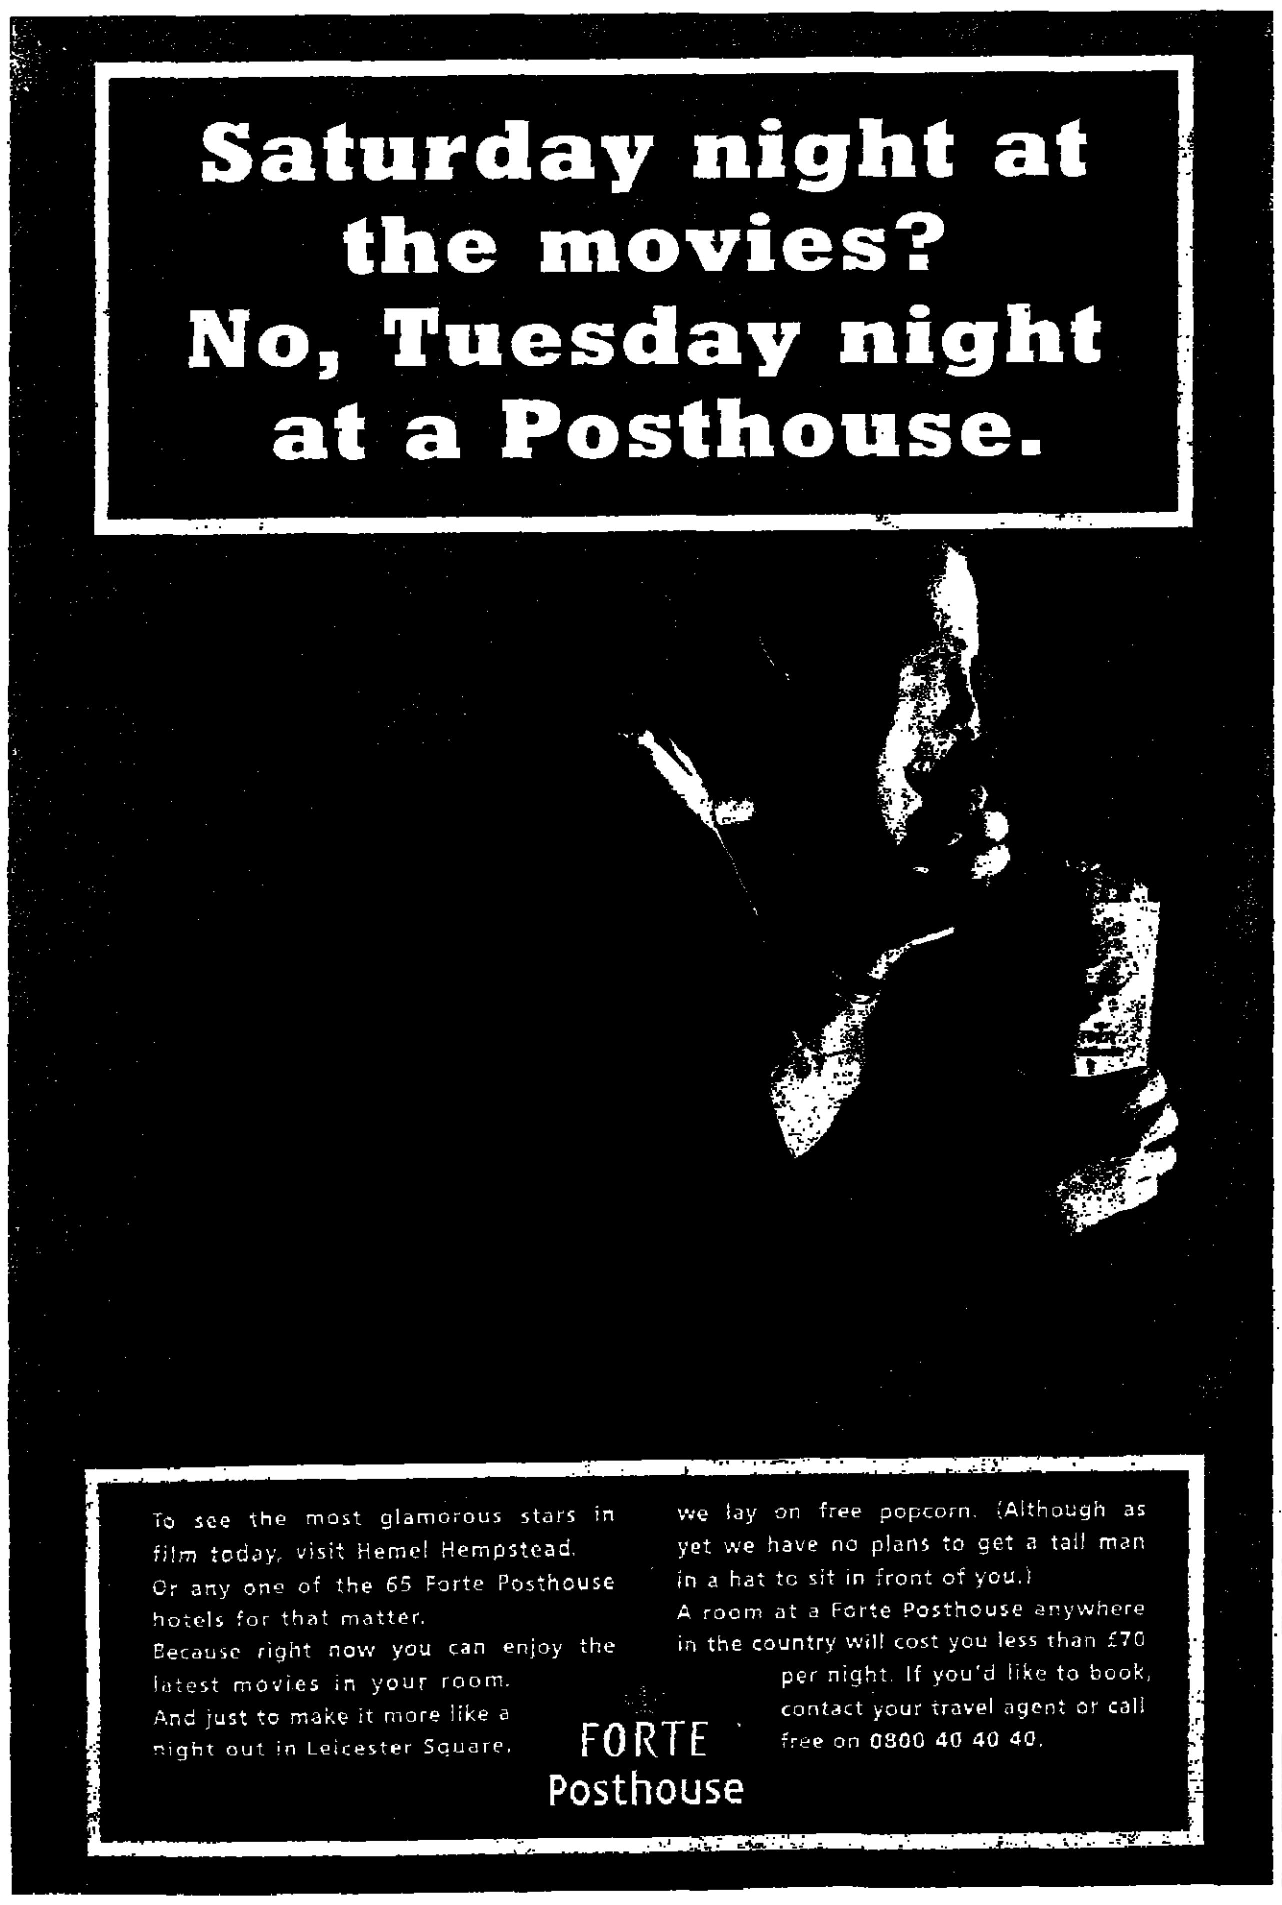
Roux reasons that there could be no other way. His club needs the resources, he could never break the pay structure to keep the talents, and so he thanks them and hopes they become very rich and fulfilled individuals. And if not? That is where Roux gives so much back. The boys who enter his club might as well be signing on for an order of monks. Their dedication has to be total.

In return, he offers the parents something rather precious — he pledges that he will back his judgment that the boy will make a footballer, that they will not be discarded, in the manner of British clubs, at 16 or 17, and that Roux and his teachers will impart to them everything that they know at least until the age of 20.

Thus, with patience again the key, he sees them through the vagaries of youth, and thus two-thirds of his teams tend to contain players who have grown like the vine in Burgundy.

Romantic? Not if one took a careful look at some of the 6ft defenders whose man-marking against Arsenal was as fierce (though not unduly unfair) as any raised in England. Stewart Houston, the temporary manager of Arsenal, brought refreshing humility to the marble halls, and admitted the qualities of the opponent.

He then uttered a pearl of manager-speak. "I warned my players about man-marking. I said: 'You'll have a gorilla up your backside, and you've got to handle it'!"



Saturday night at the movies? No, Tuesday night at a Posthouse.

To see the most glamorous stars in film today, visit Hemel Hempstead. Or any one of the 65 Forte Posthouse hotels for that matter.

Because right now you can enjoy the latest movies in your room.

And just to make it more like a night out in Leicester Square, we lay on free popcorn. (Although as yet we have no plans to get a tall man in a hat to sit in front of you.)

A room at a Forte Posthouse anywhere in the country will cost you less than £70 per night. If you'd like to book, contact your travel agent or call free on 0800 40 40 40.

Free-spending Scots look to cross-border options

By Kevin McCarra

THE Old Firm are attempting to strengthen their sides by signing players from the FA Carling Premiership. Tommy Burns, the Celtic manager, confirmed yesterday that he is likely to bid for Nigel Clough, the Liverpool striker who is out of favour at Anfield, while Walter Smith, Burns's counterpart at Rangers, has had a £2.5 million offer for Gary McAllister, the Scotland captain, rejected by Leeds United.

Celtic's flaccid attack is in need of strengthening, and Burns has already travelled widely to watch players on the Continent. He believes that his team would benefit from a deep-lying forward able to act as a prompter. Clough, signed for Liverpool from Nottingham Forest for £2.275 million in 1993 by Graeme Souness, fits the description perfectly.

"Clough is one we are interested in, and we will be checking out the situation," Burns said. "He played very well for a passing team like Forest, and that is the style Celtic would like to play. He is made to measure for the sort of role played by Peter Beardsley [of Newcastle United]. It is a specialised position, and there are not many who can fill it."

Liverpool's system has altered with the emergence of Steve McManaman and Robbie Fowler. In consequence, Clough, 29 later this month, has had his first-team opportunities limited. His club would presumably expect to recoup its outlay on the player, who has won 14 caps for England, but even if a deal could be struck with Roy Evans, the Liverpool manager, Clough would still have to be persuaded to move to Scotland and a club in the throes of reconstruction.

Nonetheless, Burns has a considerable budget for the programme. He has already spent a total of £3 million to sign Phil O'Donnell, from Motherwell, and Pierre van Hooyjdonk, a Dutchman, from NAC Breda. The success of a recent share issue, which raised more than £9 million from supporters alone, means that Burns may still have around £5 million available to him for players.

Clough: Celtic target

While reluctance on Clough's part would be understandable, a transfer to his homeland might carry greater appeal to McAllister. Rangers, with an eye to European regulations and their own playing limitations, naturally wish to purchase a Scottish midfield player. Smith said: "Leeds United seem more eager to buy than to sell."

Despite having had one offer rejected, though, it is likely that Rangers will pursue the matter. In the past, the club has waged lengthy — and costly — campaigns to sign players such as Duncan Ferguson. The sincerity of Leeds's desire to keep McAllister, 30, will be tested.

Having failed to buy one player, Rangers announced that they have lost another for the remainder of the season. David Robertson, their left back, will require surgery. He has a plate in his foot which was fitted to repair damage earlier in his career, and a screw was dislodged by a challenge in the Scottish Cup tie with Heart of Midlothian.

Ferguson puts his foot down

By Our Sports Staff

ANDREI KANCHELSKIS, the Manchester United and Ukraine winger, has been told that he must stay at Old Trafford after reports that he demanded a transfer as a result of being left out of the United side last Saturday.

"There is no way he is leaving," Alex Ferguson, the United manager, said yesterday. "I have had a chat with him and he understands why he was on the bench at Everton. It is a team game and the players have got to be rotated."

Kanchelskis has been quoted as saying: "I went to see the manager and I've asked for a transfer. I'm not happy. Not happy at all. I'm fit, there is no injury and I want to play."

Kanchelskis, United's leading scorer this season with 14 goals, was the subject of transfer speculation last season after being left out of the European Cup campaign because of the Uefa limit on foreign players.

That rift was healed and he signed a new contract shortly before the FA Cup Final.

☐ Paul Futcher, the former Luton Town and Manchester City defender, has been released by Grimsby Town to take over as the player-manager of Darlington.

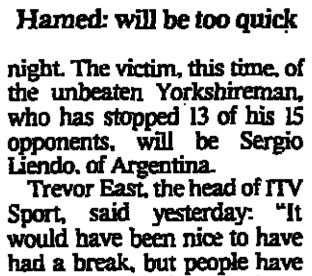
'Concerned' Hamed will display no mercy

BY SRIKUMAR SEN, BOXING CORRESPONDENT

SATURDAY again, and it is big fight night. High-profile boxing, this time with Naseem Hamed. Prince Naseem Hamed, back on the television screens even though Gerald McClellan, the American super-middleweight who suffered brain damage in his bout last Saturday with Nigel Benn, still lies seriously ill in the Royal London Hospital.

However distasteful it may be to some to see another young man crashing onto their living room floor, business is business — and there is no business like the boxing business.

Hamed, the flamboyant super-bantamweight from Sheffield, will attempt to knock his opponent senseless at Livingston, Scotland, tonight. The victim, this time, of the unbeaten Yorkshireman, who has stopped 13 of his 15 opponents, will be Sergio Liendo, of Argentina.



Hamed: will be too quick

Trevor East, the head of ITV Sport, said yesterday: "It would have been nice to have had a break, but people have paid money, boxers have trained and want to fight.

"We feel it's not our job to moralise. This was planned weeks ago and ITV are legally bound to cover it. It's thanks to TV money that there will be complete medical back up for this show, just like it always is. Less money means corners would be cut."

East said that he will be talking to Frank Warren, the promoter, to see that the production is treated "sensitively", which means keeping the boastful showboating of Hamed to a minimum. Brendan Ingle, Hamed's manager, said that his man would be suitably restrained before and during the bout.

"He will just do his somersault and no more," Ingle said. "He will just flip over the ropes and stand there, to show respect to McClellan and Benn. Naz is very concerned about McClellan and went to see him but couldn't, so he left his good wishes with the hospital staff."

It is pointless hoping that Hamed, 21, will go easy on the Argentinian, but, perhaps, he may stick to a neat display of boxing in view of last week. Hamed specialises in bashing people up until their "eyes are like slot machines — all over the place".

Ingle said: "It's like going on the production line in a factory and slowing down. You are going to get the sack. Let's not have all this hypocrisy. It's a job, like any other job. Naz is going to get in there and get on with it. His job is to get him out of there just as soon as possible.

"The other fellow has a good record. He's had 50 fights and knocked out a lot of his opponents. He's come here looking to kill Naz. Naz is going to have to stop him doing that. He is going to have to block out of his mind what happened to McClellan."

Despite Ingle's claim that Liendo has come to fight, the Argentinian is not regarded as a puncher, even though he has won state, national and South American titles and is ranked No 8 in the World Boxing Council rankings. He is considered durable, has never been stopped and has got off the floor to win.

Clearly, though, he is likely to find himself on the floor again. Hamed predicts that he will stop Liendo in three rounds. Since Liendo has neither the speed to lay a glove on Hamed nor the firepower to hold him off, expect the Sheffield man to hold up Liendo then finish him off spectacularly, according to his prediction.

Wright relaxes among the Sharks

Nicholas Harling on the impact being made by the new breed of basketball club owners

If it was not the most popular move of last summer, it has certainly turned out to be the most successful. Not everyone applauded the Basketball League's decision to admit a new franchise into its Budweiser League, least of all the top clubs in the first division, who were queue-jumped by Sheffield Sharks after believing that they had done enough to deserve promotion.

However, with British basketball revolving around more than just performances on court, the Sharks took their place among the elite in the autumn simply because they possessed the right facilities, the potential, and most important of all, the money.

The league could not afford to ignore the donation of £100,000, injected into the new venture by the Crysalis Television Company and the Australia-based Mushroom Record Company, and if vindication is needed, it only takes a glance at the Budweiser League table. The Sharks have snapped their way to the top, and, tomorrow night, at the Sheffield Arena, take on Thames Valley Tigers, the defending champions, in the National Cup Final, a repeat of the confrontation two months ago in the 7-Up Trophy Final, won narrowly by the Tigers.

Like Harvey Goldsmith, the impressario whose Leopards team has enjoyed a successful first campaign, and Barry Marshall, the pop promoter who has seen London Towers improve since he took over late last season — they overwhelmed the Sharks 84-72 in a league game on Thursday — Chris Wright is one of a new breed of owners.

Wright, the chairman of Crysalis, had always been interested in the sport. His regular trips to the United States had invariably coincided with visits to see the likes of the Los Angeles Lakers or the New York Knicks. "I had also seen a lot on television, and when the Basketball League approached Crysalis with a view to putting it on television in England, they asked me why I didn't get involved in a team," he said.

Mike Smith, the league's chief executive, told Wright that, in Ponds Forge, Sheffield possessed an excellent facility. The only drawback was Wright's reluctance to part with £100,000. A chance conversation with Mike Gudinski, of Mushroom, resolved that snag. "Mike was at Wembley for the rugby league final and I was there for the basketball play-offs," Wright said. "I was having a drink with him, and when I told him I was thinking of buying a basketball club, he told me that the game had really taken off in Australia, with crowds of 15,000. He said he'd buy half with me."

Wright and Gudinski found themselves making frequent trips to Sheffield, a city with which neither had any previous connections. Getting there, either by road or rail, proved unexpectedly time-consuming, but the Sharks were soon to make the journeys worthwhile.

With the help of what Wright calls "a disparate multiracial bunch of skinny white guys and big black ones under a coach [Jim Brandon] who has done a brilliant job", Sheffield Sharks have quickly risen to the heights. Whether they can confirm the promise of their first season with a first piece of silverware tomorrow is a different matter.

Rugby league player dies from injuries

A RUGBY league player died in hospital in New Zealand yesterday from injuries he received during a match on Wednesday. Falani Latoa, who played for North Harbour, was taken to hospital after breaking his windpipe in a game against Auckland Warriors. Television replays showed several players scrambling for the ball and Latoa falling awkwardly on it. He received treatment on the field.

Graham Carden, the president of the New Zealand Rugby League, said that the league would call for a report into Latoa's death. Gary Cooksley, his team manager, said: "It is just tragic and very difficult to cope with. You could go to a million games and never see anything like this." A police spokesman said that officials would be interviewed "so we can get a complete picture of events leading up to the injury".

Captain in waiting

CRICKET: Javed Miandad has declared himself available for the Asia Cup tournament in Sharjah next month, arousing speculation that he might be willing to take on the captaincy of Pakistan again should Salim Malik, who is embroiled in allegations of bribery, step down. Javed, 37, the fourth-highest run-scorer in Test history, reversed a decision to retire last year after a request from Benazir Bhutto, the Prime Minister, but a knee injury prevented him taking his place in the team.

English hopes high

SQUASH: England were assured of at least one semi-finalist in the Guernsey women's open championship when Cassandra Jackman and Sue Wright met in St Peter Port last night. Suzanne Horner's quarter-final against Claire Nitch, of South Africa, was expected to produce a second, and there were hopes that Linda Charman's unexpected but impressive advance to meet Sarah FitzGerald, of Australia, could provide a third. Michelle Martin, FitzGerald's compatriot and the defending champion, remains the favourite.

Two-wheelers at Aintree

CYCLING: One of the biggest fields in Britain this year lines up at Aintree racecourse tomorrow, not on four legs but on two wheels, for the 34th running of the 50-mile Eddie Soens handicap race. At final count, 174 riders were on the start list for the race on the tarmac road inside the Grand National circuit. In theory, if the handicappers prove correct, the entire field could form a cavalry-like charge for the line after two hours' racing. Matthew Illingworth, the winner in 1992 and last year, is not defending his title.

Changes prove fruitless

YACHTING: Despite unveiling last-minute changes that they hope will lift them into contention for the America's Cup, the French, Japanese and American all-women's crews all lost on the opening day of the final round-robin trials off San Diego to decide places in the semi-finals later this month. Leslie Egnot and her crew, racing their new boat, Mighty Mary, were out-smarted by Dennis Conner's Stars & Stripes, while there were also wins for Chris Dickson's New Zealand entry, Tag Heuer, and Russell Coutts's Team New Zealand.

Support for Kimberley

DRUGS IN SPORT: The case of James Kimberley, the schoolboy from Evesham who was banned for two years for taking a proscribed drug, has been taken up by Michael Spicer, his local MP. Spicer is to lobby Iain Sproat, the Minister for Sport, in the hope that pressure can be brought to bear on the International Modern Pentathlon Union to reconsider the ban before its annual congress on July 24. Kimberley, 17, claims that he was unaware that the drug, co-proxamol, contained a banned substance.

Saturday portrait: Pierre Berbizier, by David Hands, rugby correspondent

Coach who keeps his head despite threat of French revolution

ILLUSTRATION BY STEVE MARTIN

Only those of a certain age can have been readers of The Eagle, one of the great British comics, but their memories may recall the adventures of Luck of the Legion. The muscular hero (English, I always assumed, though what he was doing in the French Foreign Legion was never quite clear) had a Gallic sidekick, Corporal Trenet, who was short and dark where Luck was tall and fair.

Trenet sprang to mind when I pondered the progress of Pierre Berbizier, the coach to the France rugby union team, which started the 1995 five nations' championship trailing the clouds of glory won on tour in New Zealand last summer, but on whom the sun has suddenly gone down. Maybe it is the image of a small man struggling through the desert sands, faithful to a fault to his colleague; maybe it is Berbizier's oft-expressed admiration for the English qualities that he has constantly said he wishes to inculcate in his own players.

For desert sands, read French rugby, with its troughs and its triumphs. Berbizier has known both, as player and as coach. At the moment, the French are depressed and will be more profoundly so should they lose to Ireland at Lansdowne Road today, but judgment will be reserved until after the World Cup this summer. Not until then will Berbizier know whether he has a rugby future or whether his will be the next head to roll beneath the guillotine's blade.

It was ever thus for the little man from Lannemezan. Berbizier's birthplace, in the shadow of the Pyrenees, is not so far from Lourdes and Brive, both centres of French rugby excellence. René, his father, played first division rugby for Lannemezan, and Philippe, his brother, represented the French universities, but Pierre trained as a teacher of physical education and took himself to Lourdes, where he played full back and centre before turning to scrum half.

In his first season in the position, 1980-81, he displaced Jérôme Gallion in the national side and provoked uproar. Letters appeared in the sporting press from "Disgusted of Toulon" protesting that the strong, bouncy Gallion should have been displaced by the dark, intense 5ft 6in Berbizier. Then 22, Berbizier learnt to cope with the pressure and the experience has served him well.

He also practised judo as a youngster, a discipline which requires an inner core of self-reliance, judgment and a stubborn refusal to be beaten. Berbizier has all three, and never needed them as much as when he played against England, which he did eight times. The first occasion, in 1981, formed part of a grand slam season for France; the third, in 1987, was part of another grand slam; the last, in 1991, was his 56th and final international appearance, when England were dominant.

> 'Carling knows he is captain for the World Cup. I know I am coach for Saturday's game'

In between, England learnt about the diminutive scrum half who had become the eyes and ears of the France team. They were aware that, if Daniel Dubroca was the captain, Berbizier was his trusted lieutenant in whose hands tactical direction rested; a player with a superb understanding of the game. Never the best passer of a ball, nor the best kicker or most fluent runner, Berbizier pulled the strings. Therefore, he became, like Serge Blanco or Laurent Rodriguez, one of the players to be goaded, buffeted and knocked out of his stride by the opposition.

Berbizier, who spent most of his playing career with Agen, captained France only intermittently. Maybe it was because the coach in the mid-Eighties was Jacques Fouroux, another, even smaller, scrum half, who loved to surround himself with big men. Berbizier eventually fell out with him after the 1989 tour to New Zealand because he felt skill was being subordinated to size.

Controversially, Berbizier was omitted from the France squad which contested the 1991 World Cup. Instead, he worked for L'Equipe, the daily sports newspaper, answering readers' letters about the tournament and watching in sadness as France, roughed up again by England, left at the quarter-final stage. Three months later, Berbizier, who is on permanent secondment to the French rugby federation from the Ministry of Education, was the coach as the tumbrils carted off Dubroca, his predecessor, and Albert Ferrasse, the federation president.

One of Berbizier's first acts was to encourage a rapprochement with the English, via the media, with whom he has always enjoyed an excellent relationship in France. Occasionally, he becomes irritated with the English, whom he accuses of hypocrisy, sometimes with good cause. Yet he is an unashamed admirer of the rigour England bring to the game, of the discipline which became a characteristic of France under the captaincy of Dubroca and Berbizier in the mid-Eighties and which he drums into his charges now.

Yet the 1992 season was a disaster for France, culminating in the dismissal of two players in the game against England, and revolution loomed. Robert Paparemborde, one of the best prop forwards France has produced, led the charge against the new regime, but he was rebuffed. Berbizier stayed and produced the results.

It is not so much those that he has achieved at home that are significant — one five nations' championship, in 1993, during his reign — but what he has done away from the domestic maelstrom, where so many enthusiasts demand French flair without understanding the primary requirements of rugby in the Nineties. It is not only England's attitudes that Berbizier admires, but the structure, too, that demands less of the leading players than is the case in France.

Berbizier's greatest achievements have come away from home: series wins in Argentina (1992), South Africa (1993) and New Zealand (1994). That is an unparalleled record that has sustained him when the victories over Canada and Wales this season turned to dust in defeat by England and at home to Scotland.

"England always show me lessons, in preparation and continuity," he said of his love-hate relationship. "I admire the permanence of the English. I have to see my players when I can, whereas England's coach has so much time with his players. Carling knows he is captain for the World Cup. I know I am the French coach for Saturday's game — it's the same for Saint-André as captain.

"People talk to me about French flair, but it's not a question of just unleashing that, it's to create the environment in which it can flower. We came back from New Zealand with high hopes, but I have learnt not to try to predict the future. To make assumptions, for me, is dangerous."

Yet Berbizier has been nicknamed "Abbé Pierre" because he is always preaching the same message. He is the constant factor in French rugby, so demanding that one sometimes wonders whether France's real captain is in the stand rather than with the players.

He seeks perfection in an inexact sport, flogging himself through the sands, hoping that, one day, perhaps this summer in South Africa, he will reach the hard, sunny uplands of World Cup success which, for Berbizier the player, remained just out of reach in 1987. He will need luck at his side.

Top runners ignore cross country trials

By David Powell
Athletics Correspondent

GREAT Britain stages the world cross country championships on March 25 for the first time in 12 years, but the rare visit is not exciting many of the host nation's leading runners. More than half of the senior men's team that represented Britain last year, plus others who would be an asset, will be absent from the trials tomorrow.

While much energy has been committed towards putting on cross country's annual showpiece, Britain's team affairs have been neglected. The British Athletic Federation (BAF) has backed the event, but not its athletes.

"I thought this year, with the world championships being in the UK, that everybody would want to run," Ken Rickhuss, the chairman of the BAF, said yesterday. "It has not worked like that and it is disappointing."

Why have all the athletes not come running? "I do not feel we are being met halfway," John Nuttall, the leading British finisher in the world championships last year, said. "They expect people to turn up and run in the trial having not done their job to make sure they have the best team at the right time."

Eamonn Martin, Dave Lewis and Richard Nerurkar, who have won eight English titles between them, and Paul Evans, Britain's best world cross challenge series performer this winter, are among those who will not be at Druridge Bay Country Park, Ashington, for the trials. Neither will Nuttall, who races in Italy instead.

The world championships had been prominent in Nuttall's plans until a stomach illness interrupted his training. He had wanted to show form at the indoor meeting in Birmingham last Saturday, but, when he was offered less money than he is paid for racing overseas, he declined on principle.

Nuttall also felt insulted by the north's failure to select him for their trial team, which would have meant that, had he wanted to race in Ashington, he would have had to pay his own expenses. "I do not think cross country is organised at a professional level, not the same that track is," he said. He considers that group altitude training, which has not been arranged, as essential team preparation.

The first seven finishers tomorrow will receive automatic selection, with two places awaiting the management's discretion. Nuttall does not expect one of them — "I have not got any form this year" — but the inside word is that he may be surprised.

Nuttall, Martin, Darren Mead, Steve Tunstall and Andy Bristow, who all ran at the world championships last year, are absent. Only Dave Clarke, Martin Jones, Dominic Bannister and Barry Royden remain enthusiastic about selection.

The example of Jones highlights Britain's selection mess. Jones was Britain's third finisher in Budapest, yet has not been selected by the north; he must pay his own way in the probability of making the team ahead of others who have been financed.

Martin and Evans contest the NutraSweet London Marathon a week after the world championships. "That is one of the problems we have," Rickhuss added. "The London Marathon seems to be gobbling up people. It is so near to the world championships, it is not possible to do both." Nerurkar and Lewis are also running marathons in the spring.

"The other problem is money," Rickhuss added. "These guys are running as semi-professionals." There is money on the roads, but not in world cross country championships.

Cross country lobbyists say that BAF money favours too heavily track and field, but money is tight at the BAF and track and field produces winners. A British cross country "winner" these days is one who finishes in the top 20 of the world championships.

Arrowsmith's plans disrupted by injury

By John Hennessy

TO Jenna Arrowsmith, 14, the surprise winner of the British figure skating title in Hull in December, falls the distinction of being the youngest British solo skater in recent times to compete in the world championships, which start this weekend.

Megan Taylor and Cecilia Colledge were younger when they competed before the war, as was Yvonne Sugden, in 1951, but the comparison ends there, because in those days the number of entries was more generous. In 1951, for example, only nine nations were represented, with four skaters from Great Britain. This week, in Birmingham, there will be 33 countries and only one skater from Britain.

Joanne Conway, also 14 at the time of winning the first of her six British titles, would have reached 15 by the world championships in the 1985-86 season, but, in any event, she was replaced by Susan Jackson after a disappointing European championship.

Luck is on Arrowsmith's side to a certain extent. Although she competes in the qualifying competition at the National Exhibition Centre on Monday, the host nation is now allowed an automatic entry, so, for her, it is an opportunity to display her wares without the fear of failure. For all that, she will want to go through on merit, as she did in the European championships in Dortmund in January.

There, her luck seemed to run out. A gash in a leg, from which six stitches were removed only last Saturday, has interfered with her preparations and it is a mercy that she does not have to skate competitively for real until the short programme on Friday.

Clive Shorten, the runner-up to Steven Cousins in the British championship, is also in the wars, with tendinitis in his left knee. He seems to have learnt to live with it, as he has with the problems of trying to raise the sponsorship that would allow him to devote himself fully to the pursuit of excellence. His qualifying competition starts tomorrow. Cousins is excused from qualifying as a result of his tenth place in the event last year.

PROGRAMME: Tomorrow: Men's qualifying (2.30 and 7.0). Monday: Women's qualifying (10.30 and 3.0). Tuesday: Compulsory dances (11.30); opening ceremony (6.30); pairs short programme (7.30). Wednesday: Men's short programme (2.0); pairs free (6.30). Thursday: Original dance (2.0); men's free (6.30). Friday: Women's short programme (2.0); free dance (6.30). Saturday: Women's free (2.0)

Edey gives Kent chance to condemn TCCB cover-up

SIMON BARNES
On Saturday

ON MONDAY, Kent County Cricket Club will debate what amounts to a vote of no confidence in the Test and County Cricket Board (TCCB). If the vote is carried, it will be rather as if Tunbridge Wells returned as MP a member of the Socialist Workers Party.

The man behind it is Roy Edey, Kent member and old friend of this column. He is one of those trying people who believes that a club is a democratic organisation and that the individual can play a role in the decision-making process. He once threatened legal action to stop his county's players from playing in pyjamas; and he successfully moved to have the Kent committee reduced in size.

His latest bombshell is concerned with the notorious Kent v Warwickshire quarter-final of the Benson and Hedges Cup last year. Warwickshire made a pig's ear of covering their pitch for the game, the surface was unplayable and, after two days, the matter was settled by a bowl-out; that is, a few chaps bowling a ball at unguarded stumps. "We came to play cricket, but lost at skittles," Alan Igglesden, the Kent fast bowler, said. Warwickshire, who have a Test match ground, were deeply in the wrong, but escaped with a slap on the wrist from the TCCB.

This was an unworthy episode in a leading sport. Edey has set up the debate at the Kent AGM and the vote will be decided on a show of hands on the night rather than a postal ballot. All of this could commit Kent to a stance of opposition to the sport's governing body in England. This is an intriguing clash between cricket's visceral dislike of anything that could possibly be construed as rocking the boat and a deep Kentish feeling that natural sporting justice was denied them.

History test

Last chance for Wisden. This column's competition for the naming of the big yellow almanack's five cricketers of the year closes on Monday: get those late entries in the post. You must speculate on the editor's choice for the five players who have done most for the English season of 1994, always remembering that nobody gets the award twice. There will be five copies of Wisden 1995 for those that get closest to the editorial mind. Early entries show a surge of confidence in the man who said: "You guys are history" (and the rest was history).

Old sweat

Loony of the week: greetings to Richard Stoneman, 34, old enough to know better, and in training for the Marathon des Sables, the 145-mile trot across the Sahara. The event takes place next month, with temperatures a nice snug 120F. Competitors run for seven days carrying food, water, sleeping bag and clothes. One stage is 42 miles. Stoneman's training schedule includes the odd marathon. He aims to raise £10,000 for the Sportability clinic, where he works.

Notable absentee

The spookiest rugby match of the season took place last weekend when Centaurs met Hendon in a Courage Clubs Championship and Middlesex merit table match. The teams last met two years ago, when William Hardy, of Centaurs, hit an opposition player, Semus Lavelle. Lavelle later died. Hardy was acquitted of manslaughter in the High Court. He still plays for Centaurs, but he was injured — diplomatically or not, nobody is saying — for the rematch. Centaurs did not bring any supporters. David Gershlick, the Hendon president, said: "Both sides were anxious to keep things as low-key as possible. Centaurs did not stay long afterwards."

Heavenly help

Valery Karpin, the Russian footballer who plays for Real Sociedad in Spain, was doing awfully well but suffered a scoring block. He knew the solution: he needed to pray in an orthodox church. "Life under the Soviet regime has not damaged my faith," he said. But there was no orthodox church to be found. Eventually, he discovered one over the border, in Biarritz, but it was closed. He tried again two days later, found it open, entered and addressed himself to God. Next match? Not one goal but two.

Full compliment

This column does not normally run misprint stories, on the grace-of-God principle, but then perhaps this is not a misprint at all. Yorkshire County Cricket Club has released a prospectus for the season, designed to entice would-be members to reach for their cheque books.

"The team, under the leadership of Martyn Moxon, is determined to capitalise on the wealth of talent now lining up for Yorkshire. Michael Bevan, our exciting new signing from Australia, will compliment our own international players, the explosive Darren Gough, all-rounder Craig White, plus Michael Vaughan and Richard Stemp."

How will he do this? "G'day, Darren, you're a truly great bowler. Hi, Craig, digger, I've always admired you. Mick and Dick, well, you're both terrific blokes . . ."

Veterans' day at Lansdowne Road

Elwood's return could point way to Ireland revival

From John Hopkins in Dublin

TAXI-DRIVERS know everything, and the one in Dublin had hardly got into fourth gear on his way out of the airport before he had delivered his verdict on Ireland's five nations' championship match against France at Lansdowne Road this afternoon.

"We've absolutely no chance," he said with a smile, looking in his rear view mirror to see what reaction this verdict would bring. "Our lads are the last of the amateurs. We've no players. They don't play rugby in any of the national [state] schools any more. And the French are very professional."

If there is one city in one country in the world in which it can never be said that the home side has no chance, it is Dublin and Ireland. For years, Ireland have been ten points better at Lansdowne Road than away from it, and two matches from recent memory will serve as evidence.

The first was Ireland's stunning performance in the 1991 World Cup when they almost beat Australia. The second came on a mad March day two years ago when they demolished a highly fancied England side that included Jason Leonard, Brian Moore, Martin Bayfield, Ben Clarke, the Underwoods, Will Carling and Jeremy Guscott.

England were 6-1 on favourites to win that day, and the contrast between the anticipated result and the actual score made it one of the most extraordinary — and memorable — matches of the last few seasons. Ireland looked as though they had 17 men on the pitch, and even before half-time some distinguished Englishmen were so rattled by the ferocious tackling that they looked as though they dreaded receiving the ball. For England on that day, Dublin was far from a fair city.

It may be significant that Ireland have eight of the men who played in March 1993 on duty again this afternoon. They had nine until Paddy Johns withdrew yesterday with suspected appendicitis. The reshuffling to replace Johns involved moving Anthony Foley to No 8, where he plays for Shannon, and awarding Eddie Halvey, another Shannon player, his first cap at blindside flanker.

FIVE NATIONS' CHAMPIONSHIP

This change, combined with the one forced on them on Thursday when Ben Cronin dropped out during training and the uncapped David Tweed was brought in, has made things difficult for the Irish as they attempt to win their first match in the championship this season. Mind you, the French have not been much better, and they have brought back three old timers.

The teams have made 12 changes in all and it seems incongruous in an age of faster rugby that four men should be so long in the tooth. France's Louis Armary is 31, Franck Mesnel 33, and Marc Cécillon 35, and Tweed, who is the oldest man to make his debut for Ireland, is 35. Perhaps experience counts for something after all — the French trio are certainly experienced, with 134 caps between them.

Eric Elwood was one of the key men against England in 1993. He kicked two penalty goals and two dropped goals in Ireland's 17-3 victory. Elwood returns to the side for the first time this season, replacing Paul Burke, who was probably selected ahead of his time.

This will put an end to reminders of Bill McLaren's faux pas on BBC television when he referred to a "plane-load of Burkes" during Ireland's game against England last month.

Jim Staples regains the full back position where he has won 14 caps. What with injuries and moving from London Irish, this is his first game for Ireland since October 1992.

He was selected to play against Scotland at Murrayfield last month, only to go down with influenza. It was a good game to miss — Ireland, outplayed in the lineout in the second half, lost 26-13.

Staples plays his club rugby for Harlequins and, in a club that is supposed to be full of city slickers, he is one of the few who is just that. He works for a French bank.

Cold grey skies settled over Dublin yesterday and snow was visible on the nearby hills. Barings and Nick Leeson made the front page of the papers, but inside were photographs of flooding in Galway.

This match seems to be adjudged to be relatively unimportant, which is an accurate, if harsh, reflection of the position of the two teams in the championship. Both have lost twice, but France, having played one more match than Ireland, beat Wales in Paris.

Nobody can forecast with certainty what sort of a match it will be, but I suspect it will be high-scoring. France cannot continue to be as limp as they have been all season, and Ireland, as noted, are always more dangerous at home. The last game at Lansdowne Road ended after 27 minutes. That was the notorious Ireland-England football match. This game will go its full course.

Hastings rejoins brother in arms

Mark Souster talks to the centre who returns to the international fray at Murrayfield today

It has been a season of contrasting fortunes for the brothers Hastings. While Gavin was leading Scotland with his customary panache, Scott was forced to consider the possibility of a premature end to his international career. Then fate, in the shape of Ian Jardine's smashed cheekbone, intervened. Suddenly, Scott was back in the side and, against Wales at Murrayfield today, he wins his 52nd cap.

At 30, the younger brother by three years, he rang Jardine to offer his sympathy. He, too, had broken his cheekbone, the second time on the British Isles tour to New Zealand in 1993, when by consent he was playing some of the best rugby of his career. He knew how Jardine felt.

"I'm delighted to be back but, in all honesty, if the final whistle had gone a minute earlier in Paris then Ian would not have been injured and I wouldn't have been recalled to the side," Hastings said. "However, the door of opportunity has opened for me and I've got to take it."

In the past, Scotland's fortunes and those of the Hastings brothers have often mirrored one another. Since their debut together in 1986, they had been the linchpins of the Scotland back division and, appropriately, they both passed the 50 appearances milestone against France last year.

South Africa's convincing victory in November then upset the apple-cart. Reputations and past achievements counted for nothing. Hastings was one of ten casualties as the selectors finally despaired of Scotland's ability and will to win. Amid mutterings of comfort zones for certain players, Hastings included, a new generation was ushered in, with instant results.

Used to being in the thick of the action, Hastings, an account director with an Edinburgh advertising agency, found himself on the sidelines as the Scots reeled off three victories, latterly in wonderful fashion in Paris.

"The Ireland game was the worst," he said. "Because the match was in Edinburgh and I was sitting at work on Thursday and Friday thinking I should be training with the boys. There was such a buzz in the city.

"I watched the French game with my old sparring partner, Sean Lineen. It was a great game and I was as emotionally involved as anyone. When Gavin scored that try which set up victory, I was out of my seat."

During his brief exile, Hastings did not lose confidence in his ability. He stepped up his training regime during January and February and hoped that appearances for the Scotland A team against Ireland and France would keep him in the selectors eyes, which they did.

"Now I'm back, I've got to use all the experience I've got from my internationals and use it to the best of my ability," he said. "I'm slotting in with players I've played with for the past few years. It was a weird experience in our squad session together, fitting in again like part of a jigsaw. I know I need a big game. I'm conscious of that, but that is what I thrive on. That's what I'm looking forward to, and there's no better place to do it than Murrayfield."

But as a newcomer to a winning team, Hastings feels a particular kind of pressure, one he is not used to. Running out today against Wales, for whom he has a healthy respect, will be like winning his first cap all over again.

The way Hastings's and Scotland's season is unfolding, nobody should be surprised if it is he who scores the winning try to set up a grand slam showdown at Twickenham in a fortnight.

Underwood brothers answer call to help Leicester

By David Hands
Rugby Correspondent

WHILE the international spotlight moves away from England, the Courage Clubs Championship enjoys what could be a significant day at the top and bottom of the first division. Were Leceister, for example, to lose against Wasps, it would surely mark the end of their pursuit of Bath as well as denting their prospects for the Pilkington Cup semi-final when the clubs meet again on April 1.

To that end, the Underwoods appear on the wings for Leicester, who have won the last three league encounters. However, they have lost Wells from their back row with a knee injury. His place goes to Tarbuck, and club officials were confident that, barring substantial overnight snow, their arrangements at Welford Road make the fixture safe. Wasps restore Greenstock to the wing, welcome Andrew back at stand-off half and reconstruct their front row to comprise Molloy, Dunn and Probyn.

Whether Bath themselves are vulnerable remains to be seen. Matches with Gloucester, home or away, are never taken for granted, even if Bath have lost only once to them in the league. International calls deprive the league leaders of Hilton, Peters and Geoghegan; Hall, their captain, is injured; and Guscott is unavailable on a day when a revamped half-back pairing of Sanders and Butland takes the stage.

At some point, Northampton must start winning if they are to claw their way out of the basement. Their opportunity comes against a Bristol side deprived of three key forwards — Sharp, Shaw and Blackmore — on a day when Harlequins, the team one place above Northampton, face a potentially awkward visit to West Hartlepool without Carling, the England captain, who has a strained Achilles tendon.

Northampton, meanwhile, may take heart from their league record against Bristol — five wins and only one defeat. Northampton are able to play Hunter at full back for the first time since October, they have Rodber and Bayfield, their England forwards, and the fear of failure to spur them on.

☐ England's colts (19 and under) open their international programme against Italy at Camborne today with a pack weighing, within a pound or two, the same as the senior eight. It includes Vickery, the 18st 10lb Cornishman, at prop and Murphy, the 19st lock, who is already playing in the West Hartlepool first XV.

Welsh pack will prove key

From Christopher Irvine in Carcassonne

KEVIN ELLIS is the embodiment of spirit and lack of compromise in a revitalised Wales rugby league team, which is favourite to win the John Smith's European championship here tomorrow, despite a record of only three successes in 19 matches on French soil.

As one of only four authentic Welshmen to have appeared in all eight matches since the team's rebirth in 1991, Ellis has, nonetheless, welcomed the new "Anglos" with open arms. "Backs were never that much of a problem, but the grandparent rule has put steel into the pack," he said. "That's where it will be decided against the French and that's where we do have the edge."

Behind a pack motoring with alacrity in the opening championship match, with England, Ellis marshalled a famous 18-16 victory, scoring both tries. He is a scrum half brimful with confidence. Warrington, said Ellis, made a big mistake in loaning him to Workington Town last November. The Cumbrian air has proved invigorating.

Since leaving Bridgend in 1990 and taking the road north, partly because Robert Jones, even then, had firm hold of the Wales rugby union scrum half jersey, Ellis has invariably thrived in adversity. His rapport with Jonathan Davies, at half back, has brought Wales to the brink of a first European title, or any title come to that, for 57 years.

This summer, the pair are due to team up in the Winfield Cup. Short-term contracts signed by Ellis and Davies at North Queensland Cowboys should enliven Townsville. Springtime in southern France is preparation for that, but also October, with Wales and France together with Western Samoa in the same World Cup group.

The medieval walled city of Carcassonne is new territory for the Welsh, whose cross-Channel excursions have been traditionally short on bounty. Significantly, perhaps, there are nine survivors from the side that squeezed past France 19-18 in Perpignan in 1992.

It was by a point, too, that ten of the present French side were eventually overcome in Cardiff 12 months ago. Should France triumph at the Albert Domec stadium by the required margin of five points, they would remain European champions. They won the title when it was last contested, 14 years ago.

As gallantly as France fought before surrendering to England, the Wales forward boilerhouse should have one or two steam hammers too many for the home side. Against England, it was noticeable, too, how the converted Wigan front row of Skerrett, Hall and Cowie, plus Eyres, of Leeds, at loose forward, spurred on Moriarty, Young and company.

The European championship format is not perfect, but it has, at least, provided a competitive showdown.

Palace striker Armstrong fails drug test

By Russell Kempson

CHRIS ARMSTRONG, the £4 million-rated Crystal Palace forward, has tested positive for cannabis. Although officials from the FA Carling Premiership club and the Football Association refused to confirm or deny the matter yesterday, Armstrong has failed a random test, which was believed to be on January 23. He has subsequently taken two tests, conducted by an independent authority on Palace's instruction, but both proved negative.

Palace, struggling near the foot of the Premiership, have consistently declined to disclose the reasons behind Armstrong's absence from the team that won 1-0 in an FA Cup fifth-round replay against Watford at Selhurst Park on Wednesday. It was a strange omission, with Armstrong, 23, having missed only two matches — both through suspension — this season.

Although Armstrong has not enjoyed the best of form — he has scored only two league goals — Newcastle United made a bid of £4 million for him six weeks ago. Palace, who have repeatedly stated they have no wish to sell him, turned it down.

After beating Watford, Alan Smith, the Palace manager, appeared at a press conference, with Armstrong sitting alongside him, and made a bizarre pronouncement. He stated that there was no row between him and the player, but said: "I did not play Chris on the advice of the club surgeon. I am not at liberty to say what the problem is. Some things have to remain private."

Conflicting reports yesterday suggested that Armstrong was either missing on Wednesday because of a a groin injury, which might need surgery, or that it was because of a drugs-related problem. Smith, however, again refused to elaborate.

"I haven't got the authority to say anything," he said. "The matter is being dealt with by the club surgeon and, at the moment, Chris is training with us. The show goes on and it is business as normal."

Armstrong will not play against Chelsea in the Premiership match at Stamford Bridge tomorrow and Palace will decide at a later date when he will return to action. Smith said: "It is not down to me. The FA are involved, but there is not a problem with them. There has been no disciplinary action against Chris and I have not changed my opinion of him." The London Evening Standard later reported that Armstrong had tested positive for cannabis and claimed that Smith and Mike Hurst, the club secretary, had been interviewed by the FA. Hurst, however, declined to comment.

"Our drugs programme is based on complete trust," Mike Parry, an FA spokesman, said. "A player has to be able to come to us in total confidence, knowing that there is absolutely no danger of it becoming a public spectacle. That is the way it has to be." He would not comment on whether the FA had spoken to Palace.

Armstrong was born in Newcastle and moved to Camberwell in London when he was three. However, he spent much of his early life in care, with Roy, his older brother, until being taken in by foster parents, Roy and Pam Armstrong, from Llay, near Wrexham. Though now settled in the south and married with a young child, he still revisits the Armstrongs as regularly as possible.

He left school at 16, with no real enthusiasm for football, and worked in a beefburger factory. However, after returning to playing with local sides, he was given his professional chance by Wrexham in March 1989. After scoring 13 goals in 42 matches, he joined Millwall for £50,000 and he then moved on to Crystal Palace for £1 million in September 1992.

Last season, he scored 22 league goals as Palace won the Endsleigh Insurance League first division title. Many of the higher-profile clubs have since courted him, even though his form has slipped and Palace have maintained that he is not for sale.

Cannabis is termed a Class B substance, perceived as "recreational" and not performance enhancing. The FA's random drugs-testing programme, which is carried out by the Sports Council, is in its third season. From the 92 samples taken last season, there was only one positive test. However, over the same period, of the 1,300 members of the Professional Footballers' Association aged between 16 and 18, nine were helped with drugs problems.

Brass Knuckles prospecting for skating's precious medals

Andrew Longmore on the teenager who is drawing comparisons with the notorious Tonya Harding

Had Bonnie and Clyde decided to enter the pairs competition at the world ice skating championships in Birmingham next week, they could hardly have caused more of a stir than the girl they call "Brass Knuckles" when she took to the ice in practice yesterday.

Nicole Bobek, a 17-year-old from Detroit, gained her gangster-style knickname from her habit of wearing a ring on every finger and already a brush with the law has prompted natural and unwanted comparisons with another controversial American skating champion, Tonya Harding.

Though their cases are very different, the parallels are too strong to be mere media whimsy. Blonde, blue collar, tough-talking and chain-smoking, Bobek's education, her attitude to authority and her competitive instinct owe as much to the streets as the classroom. She never knew her father and was brought up by her mother, Jana, who fled Czechoslovakia at the age of 21, when the Soviet tanks rolled into Prague in 1968.

That she had rare talent as a skater was apparent from a very early age — she won six gold medals in state contests before the age of seven — but that the talent survived the hard driving of Jana and the guidance of a bewildering number of coaches was more remarkable. Bobek's description of herself as a "free spirit" often translated into coach's language as "unmanageable". Off the ice, she did what she wanted; on the ice, she did what she wanted, including improvising steps during her programmes, like Madonna on skates.

But it is a brief acquaintance with the United States legal system that makes Bobek's claim to Harding's black cloak irresistible. While Harding was accused of sponsoring an assault on her rival, Nancy Kerrigan, before the Winter Olympics last year, Bobek was caught without permission inside the house of a friend in a plush suburb of Detroit early in November. It was also alleged that Bobek had money in her hand, though her lawyer, Michael Friedman, later claimed that no money had been taken.

On January 19, Bobek pleaded guilty to a charge of "house invasion" and was placed on two years probation under a nightly curfew and ordered to do community service. Because she was tried as a juvenile, the case was kept confidential until Bobek made the diplomatic mistake of winning the United States national title in Providence, Rhode Island, just a few weeks later and news of what Bobek had termed a "misunderstanding" and her lawyer had described as "a youthful indiscretion" leaked out.

Either way, once the confidentiality had been breached, the charge was dismissed by the Oakland County Court, Bobek became a free spirit once more and the United States Skating Federation breathed a sigh of relief.

To add to the complications and to compound the half-truths, nobody has been willing to talk about the case. But it has not taken long for a more sinister, Hardingesque, twist to be given to the tale by Friedman's claim that the camp of a rival skater had hired an investigator to acquire copies of the court case and leak the information to the media. "It is another example of jealousy and envy at work in skating," Friedman said. "With Nancy Kerrigan it was smash her knee, with Nicole Bobek, it was sully her reputation. We have some names in mind, but we are not about to start pointing the finger because we do not have any proof."

The one thing beyond all innuendo is Bobek's ability. On her day, she is a breathtaking performer, vivacious, stylish, quite the equal of Harding if she can concentrate on her skating when, as a novice, she begins her challenge in qualifying on Monday. She has refused to give any interviews until after qualification. Having won the United States title with controversy hovering, her mental toughness has already been tested to the full. Miss Brass Knuckles clearly has a will of iron. It is not out of the question that bronze, silver or gold will hang from her neck by the end of next week as well.

GRAND AMBITIONS

Will Scotland set up a grand slam finish to rugby union's five nations' championship? David Hands reports

12 PAGES OF SPORT ON MONDAY

Scots confident of stretching winning run

By David Hands
Rugby Correspondent

SCOTLAND'S administrators may have been at loggerheads with those of Wales this week over World Cup matters, but, when it comes to rugby union's five nations' championship, the countries embrace each other fondly. For Welsh supporters, the trip to Edinburgh remains a highlight, and even though only 5,000 have tickets for the match at Murrayfield today, thousands more are gathered to will Wales to their first championship win of the season.

Their collective support, however, flies in the face of results this season, which show Scotland on a swelling, unbeaten roll and Wales in sad decline after the championship success of last season. In that sense, the opening, by the Princess Royal, the patron of the Scottish Rugby Union (SRU), of the Wooden Spoon Society terraces at Murrayfield, could not be less appropriate when the Scots have put their 1994 wooden spoon so firmly back in the drawer.

It has been a remarkable volte-face by Scotland, who must now be favoured to win — a position most Scots would go a long way to avoid. "I don't think that we are necessarily favourites," Dougie Morgan, the coach, said yesterday, though he was not convincing many. "On paper, maybe, but I have stressed that Wales have played a lot of internationals in the past 13 months and have engendered their own team spirit. They have a lot of quality players."

Yet, in beating Canada, Ireland and France since the turn of the year, Scotland have established a base of confidence tinged with the realism induced by the grim, defeated months during 1993 and 1994 which may yet carry them to a grand slam challenge match with England on March 18 at Twickenham. The Scottish management shudder almost visibly at the prospect.

Their duty has been to keep Scottish feet on the ground after the outstanding win in Paris, to concentrate upon the Welsh rather than let thoughts stray to a hypothetical slam. "We were together last weekend and got Paris out of our system, so it has been easy to focus on this weekend," Gavin Hastings, the captain, said.

In addition, two of the successes of Paris, Ian Jardine and Damian Cronin, have been removed by injury from the equation. Lucky the side that can bring in a player with 51 caps in his locker for the unfortunate Jardine: that Scott Hastings will become his country's most capped centre ahead of Jim Renwick will be neither here nor there for a player with so fierce a pride in representing Scotland.

However, the loss of Cronin is more significant. His form at lock this season has been a revelation and weakens Scotland in an area where Wales are strong. The problem for Wales, in a fixture replete with outstanding tries (many of which were being replayed on television programmes yesterday), is to make sure that they use whatever possession they gain from set-pieces more productively than a stream of Neil Jenkins penalties.

It would not take much to turn Wales into a better side than their results suggest they are. Last season, their three tries against Scotland at a watery Cardiff carried them forward to an unexpected title. They know that they have the most consistent goal-kicker in world rugby in Jenkins, although Gavin Hastings's form at the moment is comparable; they know they have a competitive pack, a tactical brain at scrum half and worthy finishers.

In addition, the players rushed back in against England last month after long absences through injury — Ieuan Evans, Nigel Davies, Hemi Taylor — have a greater degree of match fitness now than was apparent then. Yet can Wales conjure space, can they contrive a celebratory try for Evans on his fiftieth appearance after tryless matches against South Africa, France and England?

The debate in Wales centres around Jenkins at stand-off half. When will he spark the national side in the way that he illuminates Pontypridd? Or should a place be found for him at full back and a more imaginative footballing brain introduced. Perhaps, today, Jenkins will answer the questions that his critics have hurled at him.

Scotland's problem is to keep their momentum at a time when fresh developments are being introduced within their domestic game, of which a national cup competition is only the latest. As it happens, the Scottish Rugby Union (SRU) is also taking steps to embarrass ticket-holders found to have sold on their tickets at inflated prices, by posting stickers on seats at Murrayfield warning the occupant that their place has come from the black market.

Whether this will make Murrayfield appear a less user-friendly stadium remains to be seen, but, if it can help recreate the Fortress Murrayfield of the pre- and post-1990 period, the SRU will be happy. Yet the fortress depends on its defenders, on Gavin Hastings and his colleagues, and this year the siege has been lifted.

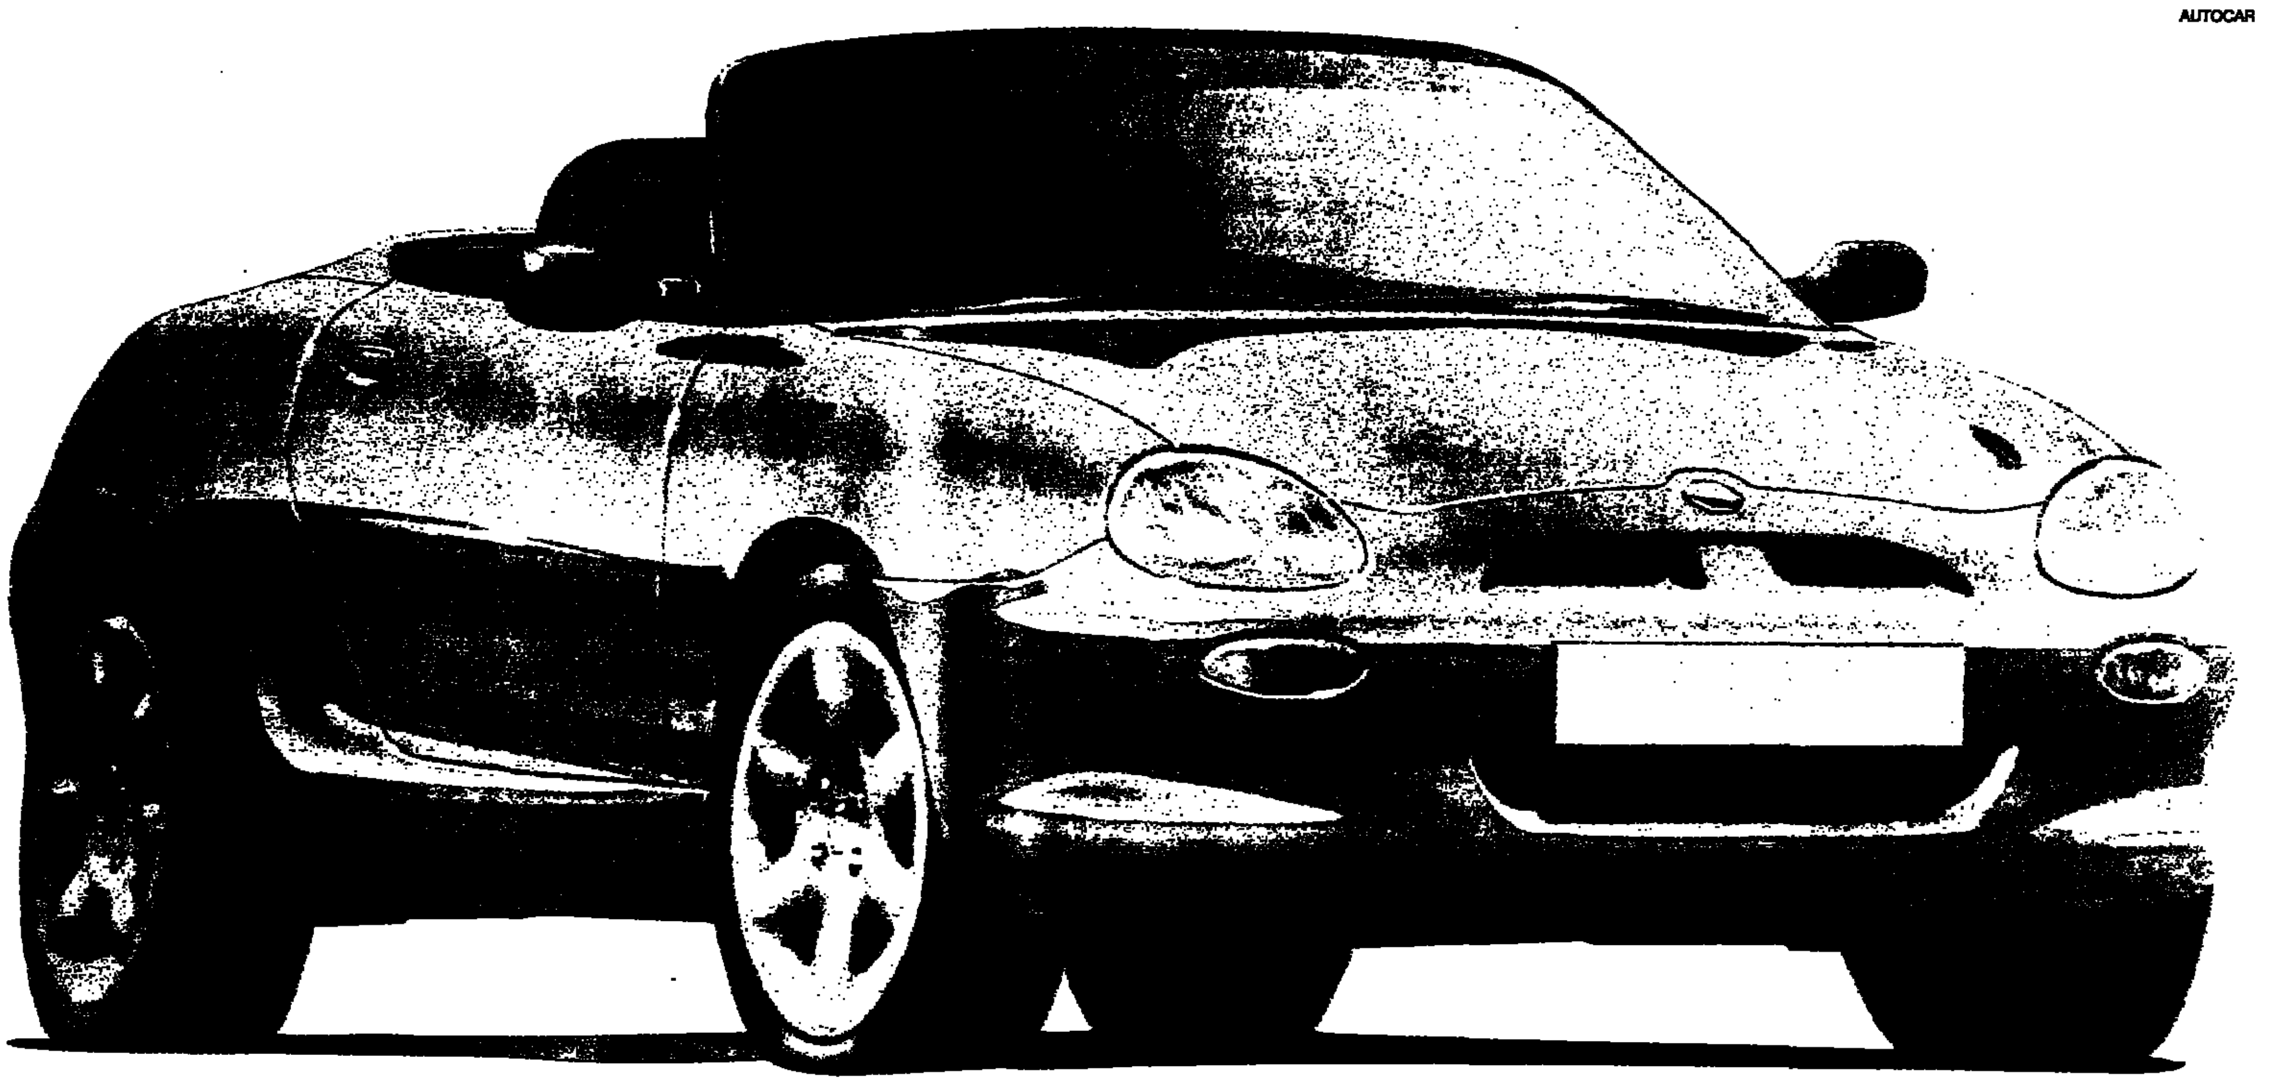
Rover's return: The MG roars back



AUTOCAR

The MGF is a symbol of a car giant that has achieved a remarkable turnaround

The covers will next week finally come off the car Britain has waited 15 years to see. Bosses from the biggest car companies, celebrities, journalists and television crews will all race past the glittering Mercedes stand at the Geneva Motor Show, around Lamborghini and Ferrari to Rover ... to see the new MG.

If ever a car has captured the public imagination, it is this. For the MG is more than just another sports car: it is The British Sports Car and a symbol of the new Rover Group, one of the most remarkable stories of industrial revival in modern times.

Being bought by BMW a year ago this month has only accelerated the pace of the company's rapid growth. The problem is that managers can barely believe the story themselves, according to John Towers, the company chairman.

Before he set off for Geneva, Towers called a meeting this week of Rover's 200 senior men and women. In times past, that was the signal for panic, cuts and the sort of decisions that led to the demise of MG in 1980. This time it was to tell the people who run Rover how to cope with success.

"Every time we launched a new model in the past," says Towers, "it was the car that was going to make or break us. We don't have that now because we are creating a business which does not depend on one single event.

"These people spent years worrying whether they would be in a job tomorrow and what would happen next. Now we have to learn that managing success is just as difficult."

Ten years ago, British Leyland — Rover's predecessor — lost £49.6 million: BMW is expected to declare later this month that its new acquisition made £80 million last year.

Success is not just measured in profits: how many foreigners wanted to buy British-made Rovers a decade ago? The company sold 130,000 vehicles abroad in 1985: last year the figure was 219,300 and is rising fast.

BMW has also told Rover to increase investment by 25 per cent to about £2 billion over the next five years and recruit 300 extra designers for its styling and engineering studios.

Towers says three new models are already in the pipeline which will appear in the next few years in an almost breathless push to a production output of 750,000 vehicles a year between Rover cars and the incredibly successful Land Rover division by the end of the century, an increase of 50 per cent in five years.

The MGF, a radically modern two-seater which will cost between £15,000 and £18,000 and be fired by a new generation of the company's K-series engines, is the latest new model but by no means the last. Within weeks the new Rover 400 small car will arrive, the last model to come from the 15-year co-operation with Honda of Japan.

'After years of worry, we have to learn how to manage success'

Towers: man at the top

Towers will never tell what is next until it arrives but a new "baby" Land Rover — a smaller, cheaper four-wheel-drive to beat the Japanese — is almost certain and there has to be another Mini.

Nobody knows yet whether Bernd Pischetsrieder, BMW's chairman, will get his wish and see some old names revived. Pischetsrieder, a nephew of Sir Alec Issigonis, inventor of the Mini, which is still going strong after 35 years, wants to see the return of names such as Riley and Wolseley. Rover is known to be investigating whether to build a Jaguar-rivalling, luxurious Riley.

The fact that Rover is even contemplating such expansion, and needs new people to add to its 2,500-strong design team in Coventry, will quash fears that the BMW takeover meant Rover would become simply a colonial outpost of its German master.

If anything, Rover could be more powerful and independent with BMW than when it was relying on Honda technology to develop its mainstream cars. Towers says: "We have always said we would maintain the capability to make every part of the car. BMW's strategy is to allow us to work independently and that is giving us a lot of freedom."

The two sides do meet at a series of Anglo-German coordinating groups, from board level to marketing and sales groups, basically so the two companies don't bump into each other in the marketplace and spoil each other's activities.

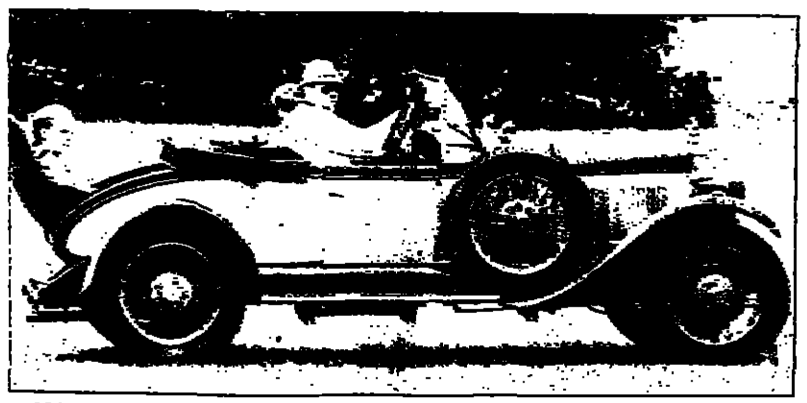
They are learning from each other and, surprisingly, Rover has been able to give BMW, arguably the world's most successful carmaker of the past decade, a few lessons, particularly in industrial relations.

While BMW is struggling through engineering strikes in Germany, Rover has one of the best industrial relations deals in the world. Every worker is guaranteed a job for life and everyone gets regular training and even grants to take up hobbies and learn new skills, from sheep rearing to learning Japanese.

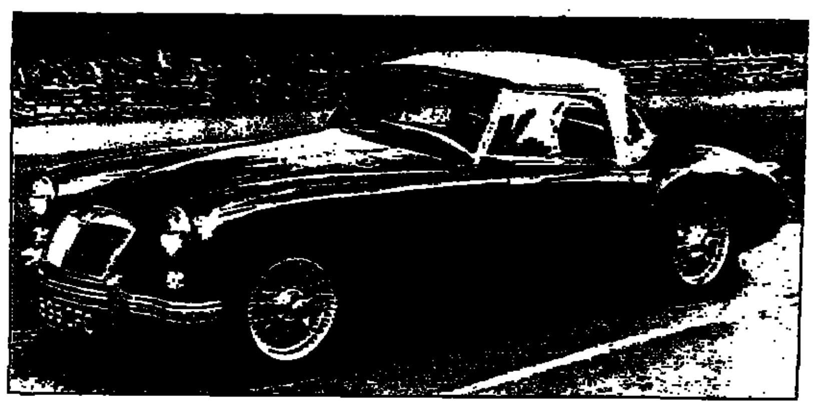
Innovative thinking was needed to get the best out of a smaller workforce making more cars. There are 36,000 Rover workers today compared with 77,000 a decade ago, when the company made only 400,000 vehicles a year.

And Rover has another world-beating virtue: no other firm can make an MG. The badge belongs to Rover and the style can only come from the years of tradition, which, in spite of the huge changes, will never be swept away.

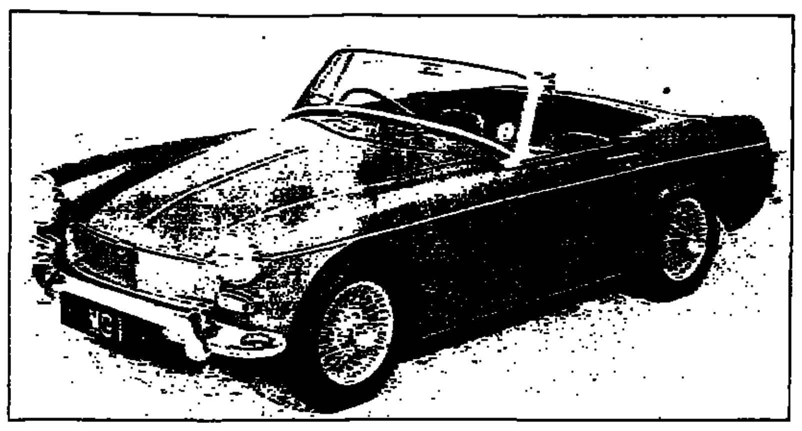
Seventy years of the Great British Sports Car



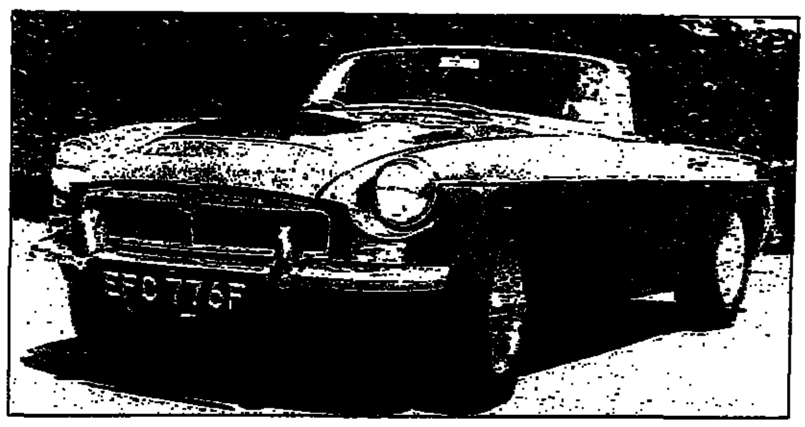
1929 Mark IV: a mould-breaker that set the pattern for future MGs



1959 MGA: first of a classic series. The MGF will be unveiled next week



1964 Midget: sluggish but characteristically cute for the stylish Sixties



1967 MGB: the design classic launched in 1962 that set the marque apart

Exotic Aston Martins and Ferraris were always out of reach of all but the rich ... but anybody could afford an MG, even from the earliest days when the cars were little more than converted saloons (Kevin Eason writes).

The MGF, to be launched next week, is the latest in a line of cars that have become as much a part of motoring folklore as Bentley, Rolls-Royce or the Mini. When enthusiasts the world over think of the definitive British sports car, they think of an MG.

Morris Garages, an offshoot of the famous motoring conglomerate, stocked all the usual sensible saloons, including the full Morris range, in the 1920s. Cecil Kimber revolutionised the business when he took over as general manager, by converting a four-cylinder Morris Cowley into a two-seater and offering it in pastel shades.

It stuck out like a sore thumb at a time when you could have any colour so long as it was black, and it set the pattern for MGs to come. In 1924, Kimber had enough confidence to put the MG badge on a converted Bullnose Morris ... and the legend was in the making.

Within five years there was an MG factory, at Abingdon in Oxfordshire, and the company got its own engineering team, fired with the notion of producing sports cars for ordinary people.

The J2 Midget of 1932 cost just £199 10s but could rattle to a top speed of 70mph and travel 400 miles on one tank of petrol.

After the war, the model range grew to include the distinctive 1955 MGA, while the Sixties were marked by the MG Midget, a car with performance which these days would barely embarrass a push-bike but had characteristic cute styling.

The MGB, though, launched in 1962, set the marque apart. The car never broke any performance records but that hardly mattered because the look has been one of the most enduring to come from any design studio anywhere.

Everybody wanted one. Viscount Linley bought one second-hand for £800, Sting owned one, so did Angela Rippon. S.J. Perelman, the famed Hollywood humourist, drove his from Paris to Peking.

Thousands, though, were bought by farmers, postmen, bricklayers — anybody who yearned for a change from the world of lookalike hatchbacks and saloons.

The Americans were potty about them, accounting for 70 per cent of the 511,000 MGBs made at Abingdon. But the plant was so inefficient that the company lost £900 on every car it sent to the United States, and those kind of economics led to the demise of MG.

When the end came, it was less drama than Carry on Cars. Executives, their wives and 100 American dealers met at London's Connaught Rooms to celebrate 50 years of MG ... only to hear in the after-dinner speech by a British Leyland executive that the company was being killed off.

Although BL tried to keep the marque alive, the attempts were a half-hearted botch, with the badge stuck on the bonnets of souped-up Metros, Maestros and Montegos. Nobody was fooled and Britain yearned for the return of a real MG.

BL never understood but Rover's new bosses do: MGs never die. That is why they had to give the badge a new life.

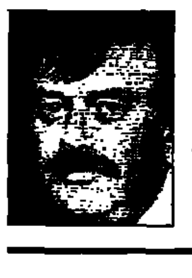
DRIVEN TO DISTRACTION



Peter Barnard

When I lived in the City of London, the desk sergeant at Snow Hill police station and I had a relationship that was a model of community policing, long before the phrase was invented. He would look up when I came crashing through the swing doors and say: "Oh hello, Mr Barnard, how are we today?" as if he was a surgeon on his rounds who had recently removed my appendix.

If I failed to turn up for a week he would ask if I had enjoyed my holiday or inquire as to whether I had been ill. But normally I saw him once a week for that is roughly how often my car was clamped.

The principal annoyance was that there was no need for parking restrictions in the side street concerned and there was no great turnover of visiting traffic to justify having meters. So the meters, the tickets and the clamping were all about one thing: raising money.

This is why motorists get so angry about parking restrictions. We are not opposed to them where they make sense, but if the main purpose of the restrictions is to assist traffic flow then why are we punished for parking in a quiet side street while, for example, a taxi rank operates with impunity slap outside Harrods on the main westbound road out of London?

So I am less enamoured of this week's RAC report on parking in London than is the RAC itself. "Parking in central London is becoming easier," it says, "as enforcement is tightened".

The Times published some interesting examples of what "tightened enforcement" actually means, including mothers ticketed for dropping children outside a school and tickets being doled out in Kensington because vehicles overlapped parking bays, even though the bays are too short to take the average car.

The fantastic cost of parking in London and the draconian attitude to miscreants, together with the fact that private clamping and towaway firms carry logos on their vehicles which, what a coincidence, make them look like police vehicles, all add up to a recipe for resentment.

If as I suspect the underlying policy is to make big city parking viable only for those with big money, whether in the form of cash for fines or chauffeurs or taxi fares, then we are coming to the end of the egalitarian dream in which the motor car would be the freedom chariot for all.

The stunt of the week is Brian Mawhinney's "tough new curbs" on emissions from vehicles, which include fines of up to £1,000 for errant car drivers and £2,500 for vans and lorries. But how are drivers to know they have breached the limit?

Black smoke from the exhaust pipe means you are in trouble, but the absence of same does not mean you are not in trouble. Perhaps we could all buy a gas analyser of the kind used by MoT testing stations? They measure two things: carbon monoxide as a percentage and hydrocarbons (basically unburnt fuel) in parts per million. Cost? Up to £4,000 per machine. So we won't bother with that.

Are gas analysers reliable? Garages I have spoken to say "only up to a point". There are companies that periodically turn up to test the testers and more often than not they announce that the machine needs "re-calibrating". Possibly, possibly not. The cost of re-calibration? £120.

Garages are being encouraged to buy their own forecourt analysers, into which motorists would put a coin, place a nozzle over the exhaust pipe and get a red or green reading. At around £3,500, don't expect a crop of them overnight.

As for roadside checks, this will involve the kind of manpower resources which are unthinkable given the other pressures on cash. So cowboy haulage firms will simply risk the fines while responsible hauliers and motorists just get something else they have to worry about.

Are car exhaust tests clean?

History repeats itself at glorious Goodwood

Vaughan Freeman on a blast from the exciting past of motor racing

BLASTS from the past come no faster, louder or more evocative than the Goodwood Festival of Speed which this summer will bring to the magnificent home and grounds of Lord March in West Sussex probably the greatest collection of classic racing cars ever gathered.

It is to motor racing what Ascot is to horses and Henley to rowing. Cars worth millions will be thrashed up the mile and a quarter Goodwood hill climb, the longest and fastest in Britain, as entrants risk all to set their best time.

The theme is to recreate great battles of motor racing history.

Alfa Romeo, Bugatti and Maserati models that fought out the 1933 Italian Grand Prix line up again together. Stirling Moss and Derek Jenkinson will be reunited with the Mercedes-Benz 300 SLR in which they won the 1955 Mille Miglia. The Ford GT40s, Ferraris and Porsches from Le Mans of the late 1960s will be there and the Carrera Panamerica road race cars from the 1950s.

A true highlight will be the first run in anger for almost 60 years of the Mercedes-Benz W165 which won the Tripoli Grand Prix in 1939. Other tussles to be recreated include the 1965 Monaco Grand Prix and the 1973 Targa Florio.

Robert Brooks, whose company will auction historic sports, competition and collectors' cars on the eve of the weekend, and who also holds the hillclimb record for pre-1970 cars, explains Goodwood's success: "Simply, the atmosphere is unbeatable."

Kevin Eason wonders if car makers are pulling a fast one and sweeping pollution under the 'green' carpet

The Ford Mondeo, Car of the Year in 1994, came bottom in tests organised by an influential European transport group to find the most polluting new cars.

Research from the European Federation for Transport and Environment could shatter faith in official tests for toxic exhaust gases and comes as Brian Mawhinney, the Transport Secretary, this week announced a crackdown on the most polluting cars on Britain's roads.

The federation claims that manufacturers deliberately design cars to pass tests drawn up by the European Union which sets standards on exhaust pollution. Although new cars pass the EU tests, it claims, the same models spew out pollutants, such as nitrogen oxides, hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide, in greater quantities once out on the roads.

Ford, Mazda, General Motors and Toyota were named as the biggest offenders in the extensive research into 31 models.

The federation says: "Ford, along with some other manufacturers, have clearly prepared the car to perform well only within the EU emission test, ignoring the emissions outside that test cycle."

The report adds: "Several car makes showed very high 'hidden' emissions under these conditions, which are not covered by the EU test cycle. These are clear signs of manufacturers making an effort to have their cars pass the test cycle but not bothering to make sure emissions are low under all conditions."

The federation's decision to carry out its own tests stemmed from the fact that consumers might be able to find out the top speed, acceleration and fuel consumption of their new car, but they will not be able to compare the amount of polluting gases that come from the tailpipe. In addition to the key components of pollution and fuel economy, experts checked features such as each car's recyclability, noise and "passive" safety strengths, such as ability to absorb crash impacts.

Ford said the Mondeo passed all legal requirements and the federation had been unfair in not accounting for the car's safety, security and general environmental package, including "green" production facilities in Belgium.

The federation feels that tests should be tougher still and information comparing individual models be available to buyers in every EU market.

Gijs Kuneman, the federation director, says: "Consumers who want to compare cars on environmental aspects are right: first, because there are enormous differences between models: second, because they have a right to know. However, it is very hard to get hold of the necessary data."

Federation researchers identified 26 models which came out top of its wide environmental classification, with combined attributes of relatively low emissions, good recyclability and fuel economy. They ranged from the Citroen AX to the Volkswagen Passat TDi turbodiesel.

However, results from the specific pollution test were more disturbing, showing a wide variation between the official figures and the federation tests.

Even models which had good all-round qualities failed when put through the stiff federation exhaust check, which included 30 per cent of the driving cycle at a constant 31mph (50kph), 20 per cent at 37.5mph (60kph) and 20 per cent at 56mph (90kph) plus a mix of "stop-start" acceleration and slowing down. That is closer to "real" driving than the EU's cycle, claims the federation.

In a measurement of carbon monoxide emissions, for example, the Mondeo performed almost twice as badly in the federation test. Using the index of the average car at 100, the Mondeo scored 65 in the EU test but 148 in the federation cycle.

The results were much the same for hydrocarbons (HC) and nitrogen oxides (NOx). The 2-litre Mondeo scored 80 for the EU hydrocarbon test and 158 for the federation while, in the EU NOx cycle, it scored 115 but 200 in the federation examination.

The federation claims that the Mondeo and the Mitsubishi Galant 2.0 were "prime examples of cycle beating" but Ford's Scorpio and the Toyota Camry 2.2 also scored badly in more than one pollutant test.

The report adds: "Ironically, the Mondeo was voted 1994 Car of the Year by European motor journalists, who obviously did not include environmental performance in their judgment."

Tesco's petrol perk

Tesco has beaten the pack to offer the first low benzene unleaded petrol. Experts fear increasing emissions of benzene could cause cancer, leading Tesco to stock petrol containing under 1 per cent of the chemical.

Seven sites in London this week got the first supplies of the fuel, which is no more economic but safer than conventional unleaded. It should be available at all 222 Tesco superstore filling stations by the end of the year.

VW Polo wins award

Volkswagen's Polo won the car of the year title awarded by What Car? magazine this week. Among winners, the Range Rover was judged best off-roader and Jaguar's new XJ saloon the best luxury car. Vauxhall won two awards: for the Vauxhall Tigra as best coupe and Omega as best executive car. Best fun car was Toyota's RAV4 GX.

Big makers are under increasing attack for not fully investigating mystery fires and other alleged design faults, reports Tony Dawe

'The company did not even inspect the car, and offered no apology'

Leading car-makers are being accused by motorists of showing "massive indifference" to fires and other serious faults which have wrecked many vehicles, causing danger as well as damage.

Scores of owners have contacted Car 95 to complain that manufacturers have refused to investigate their problems and told them, instead, to seek redress through their insurance policies.

The complaints were sparked by last month's Car 95 report into mystery Renault Espace fires. The French company had initially taken little action but was prompted by our investigation to recall 4,000 turbo diesel models.

Renault is also being criticised for failing to acknowledge a possible design fault which has caused engines in several diesel models, including the Espace and Clio, to seize up after being driven through shallow floodwater.

Other grievances include claims that Citroën refused to investigate a mystery blaze which destroyed a BX19 while it was parked, and increasing concern over Vauxhall's failure to explain a spate of fires that have damaged its best-selling Cavalier.

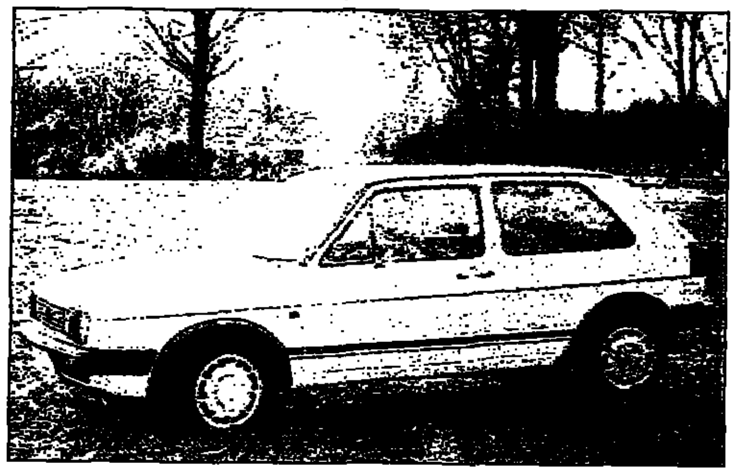
Manufacturers are thought to be reluctant to accept new design faults because they have been forced to admit so many others. Orders to recall five million cars across Europe have been given in the past fortnight. In addition to the Renault Espace, three million Vauxhall Astras and their Opel equivalents have been recalled because of a potential fire hazard, and nearly two million Volkswagen Golf and Jetta models are to be modified to eradicate an overheating problem.

The Volkswagen fault will cost the company about £60 million. Engineers have discovered that the heat exchanger can age prematurely if the coolant circuit runs at too high a temperature, causing fluid to leak and the engine to overheat.

The fault affects Golf and Jetta 1.6 and 1.8-litre models built between 1983 and 1989. About 100,000 have been sold in Britain. Volkswagen is trying to trace the owners.

Renault, meanwhile, is still struggling to cope with the recall of Espace turbo diesels for a new fuse and clamp to be fitted, to prevent the fires which have struck at least 40 vehicles. Several owners have reported that dealers told them they must wait for a formal recall letter from Renault before anything can be done.

The company insisted yesterday that dealers had been instructed to carry out the first part of the modification as soon as owners contacted them. This involves fitting a plastic retaining clip to keep the fuel filter outlet away from electrical wiring. Renault said it would investigate cases where the repair was not done immediately.



The VW Golf: fixing fault will cost the company £60 million

The accusations of "indifference" received by Car 95 include Renault's lack of action over the flooding problem. Tim Baker, of Guildford, Surrey, was travelling in his parents' Renault Clio 1.9 diesel last December when it stopped immediately after going through shallow floodwater.

"I was astounded when the mechanic called out to the car said it would need a new engine. Renault said the same when their engineers eventually saw it. The problem had been caused because the air intake was positioned behind the front bumper and had sucked water into the engine, making it seize.

"There was nothing in the handbook to warn us of the danger but when we raised this with Renault, the company said we must have driven through deep water and it was our fault. Our insurance company is still trying to resolve the matter with Renault but in the meantime my parents have been stranded without a car for two months".

The same problem has affected the Espace, leaving Jill Buque, of Worthing, Sussex, with a repair bill for £3,000, for which Renault will not accept liability. Royston Morgan, of Nottingham, discovered the engine of his Espace would cut out while driving through heavy rain and spray on motorways. Frustrated by Renault's indifference, he has carried out his own modification, adding an extra piece of pipe to the air intake and clipping it higher up in the engine compartment.

Renault said the positioning of the air intake was common to several other manufacturers and that drivers often failed to judge hazards such as standing water. He added that warnings would be carried in new handbooks.

Ken Walker, of Burnham, Buckinghamshire, saw his Citroen BX19TRS go up in smoke after parking it outside a local supermarket last December. There had been no previous hint of trouble and he believes a potentially lethal mechanical or design fault was to blame. The car was still covered by an extended warranty but Citroën has offered no compensation and left him to negotiate with his insurance company.

"My concern remains the manufacturers' indifference," he said. "Citroën UK's head office is only minutes from where the vehicle was taken after the incident yet the company chose not to examine it, offered no apology and certainly no recompense".

More Cavalier owners have complained of Vauxhall's lack of interest following fires similar to those reported in Car 95 last week. Owners and insurers believe a design fault has caused the fires in 1988-91 cars.

Garry Campbell, of Inverness, whose 1988 Cavalier escaped serious damage in a similar incident, has offered a possible explanation. "My fire was traced to the ignition switch and mechanics have told me this is a common fault with older Cavaliers. The first sign of other fires was near the switch and a fault with it would explain why starter motors and other equipment came on suddenly."

JAMES MORGAN

Devil of a job to drive? Nonsense, says Sue Phillips of her £144,000 bright red Lamborghini Diablo. 'Supercars are just not the impossible beasts so many men would have you believe"

The supercar is not just for road Rambos. Sue Phillips, who is smitten with speed, talks to Helen Mound

Sue Phillips is a rare breed. Parked on her lawn is a Toyota Hilux pick-up "for mucky days". In her drive is the Ferrari-lookalike Honda NSX "for when I don't feel like thinking too hard about my driving". And filling all the space in her double garage is a bright red 5.7-litre V12 Lamborghini Diablo. "I take it out when I'm in the mood for serious driving." This collection of cars is Sue's preferred choice over buying her own home.

Stepping into the male-dominated world of high performance motoring is a brave move for any woman. For Sue, it was an act of defiance. "In the past, if I showed an interest in something like a Ferrari, I'd get a chorus of men telling me how difficult and complicated they were to drive. There was lots of head-shaking and tut-tutting.

"The first time I drove a Diablo, I realised what a myth all that was. They're not the impossible beasts so many men would have you believe."

songwriter. Sue would rather feed her supercar habit than invest in buying a house. Though she lives in a rented cottage in East Anglia, she has a collection of cars worth more than £200,000, which prove a satisfactory replacement for husband and home.

There are two striking features about Sue and her Diablo. That the car has clocked up the equivalent of 3,000 miles since she bought it new, seven months ago, demonstrates how often she's "in the mood for serious driving". She also has an extraordinary talent for imitating the sound of high-performance cars at full throttle, a skill usually possessed only by small boys.

"I remember hearing the note of the Lambo's engine for the first time, accelerating through an underpass," a note she can growl time and time again as she recalls stories of her motoring "conquests" and rolls her eyes.

At last year's British Grand Prix, she detected a feeling of camaraderie from other women as she roared up in her new car. "It makes most men feel uncomfortable and jealous, but women seem to see the funny side of that.

"It's also amusing when a guy in a Ferrari spots it's a woman driving the Diablo. You can see him thinking 'how vulgar' but I can think 'how slow'."

Sue occasionally finds the world of supercars unwelcoming to women. She was not surprised when McLaren refused her a test drive of its new F1, even when the request for the car had gone through The Times. A spokeswoman for the company claimed it didn't feel a feature with Sue was suitable coverage for the car.

Generally, the industry has treated her well, though. Lamborghini delivered the four-wheel-drive VT Diablo to her home for a test drive and Ferrari lent her the new F355. "On the whole, it's male drivers who try to put women off these cars," she said. "Most manufacturers are quite happy to gain a feminine appeal."

Becoming the proud owner of a £143,937 Diablo wasn't enough, however. Sue wanted to prove herself worthy of owning it. "I knew I wasn't as good as the car, so I spent six months training to take the RoSPA advanced driving test. Now I'm safe driving the car in snow, ice, fog, floods, you name it. When the Diablo kicks out, I know how to handle it." So now zipping to the supermarket in her 202mph Lamborghini sportscar isn't only one of the most thrilling parts of her day, it's also one of the safest.

Sue is tempted to take her Diablo to the Nardo test track in Italy, one of the few places in Europe where it could be pushed to its limits. "I'd like to go just once. Just to say I've done 200mph in my car." She lets out another boyish engine roar and there's more eye-rolling. "After that I'm not sure. I'm thinking about buying the F355 but then there's the Bugatti EB110, the Ferrari F130, the Lamborghini P140 . . ."

The money Sue spends on cars might seem astronomical, but then she points out: "I can't believe there are women who spend £40,000 on a kitchen.

"You know, there are some people who just don't like cars," she says incredulously.

WHERE YOU CAN PUT YOUR FOOT DOWN

ANYBODY who owns a high-performance sports car understands the desire to find out "what it does". (Helen Mound writes).

The huge flat radius of the circular Nardo test track in Italy allows supercar drivers the rare chance to reach speeds in excess of 200mph. It is claimed to be the longest, fastest and safest test track in Europe.

The rich, fast and famous can drive on UK circuits, but only at more conservative speeds.

True supercar enthusiasts join the 96 Club, which was dreamt up for owners of "nice cars". It organises private track meetings at Brands Hatch, Silverstone, Donington, Thruxton, Mallory Park, Castle Combe and Goodwood. The club's joining fee is £293, annual membership is £470 and each club day — 14 this year — costs £59.

Porsche, De Tomaso, Ferrari and Lamborghini all organise "driving days" for customers at race tracks around the country, which usually include testing the latest models.

Most manufacturers also employ a race driver to give demonstrations. Honda has just signed Jonathan Palmer, the former Formula One driver, to give all new NSX buyers instruction at the Bruntingthorpe track in Leicestershire.

Goodwood in West Sussex (0243 789660), costing £2,000-£3,000 a day, is the most popular track for private hire, while at Brands Hatch in Kent (0474 872331), £5,150 buys a day's exclusive use of the short Indy circuit, complete with medical support and marshals.

For a "one-off" experience on a race track, Carrera Sports organises driving days for Lamborghini, Porsche and Ferrari owners. Held at Goodwood on bank holidays throughout the summer, drivers pay £70-£80 to let rip in their cars without the worry of speeding fines.

Low cost of unleaded petrol in Britain

British motorists buy the third cheapest unleaded petrol in Europe, according to the latest AA monthly survey.

The national average of 53.5p a litre (243p a gallon) was beaten only by Spain at 53.42p and Greece with 51.49p. Unleaded in France costs 69.71p

Limited success

More than half the allocation of 300 of Volvo's limited edition 850 T-5R models have been sold, finding customers as diverse as a peer, a newspaper editor and a number of buyers deserting Saab, BMW and Porsches, according to Martyn Webb, manager of customer operations for Volvo.

Loads of Ladas

Lada has imported 333,333 cars through its Carnaby Import Centre at Bridlington, East Yorkshire. The company has its own assembly line which upgrades the Russian-built models with new components and special features for the United Kingdom marketplace.

Honda in front

Honda leads Britain's motorcycle sales charts with registrations at more than 13,400 last year and still rising. The company accounts for 27 per cent of the UK market selling machines from tiny mopeds to the CBR900RR Fireblade.

Rover's return

If George Edwards had planned to buy a Rover, nobody would have minded: Mr Edwards took a £6,000 loan with AA Financial Services to buy a new car but when the cheque landed on the mat of his home in Kettering, Northants, Freddie the dog decided lunch had been served and promptly ate it. The AA says that normally a replacement cheque would have taken several days — but as Freddie was clearly not planning to cash it, a new one was sent immediately so Mr Edwards could buy his Peugeot 309 diesel.

Sloping off

An unusual result of the BMW buyout of Rover will be seen this weekend. Land Rover and BMW are jointly sponsoring two World Cup ski races, the women's downhill and the Super G at Saalbach. Land Rover says as many as four in ten customers enjoy skiing.

Budget buy

Peugeot has a new entry level model for buyers on a budget. The 106XN, with one-litre, 50bhp petrol engine and four-speed gearbox, joins the range at £6,695, some £700 under the previous base car price.

Up, up and away

Bob Lutz, president of Chrysler, has decided on a quicker way to travel than four wheels by buying a Czech air force jet trainer. Lutz, a former US Marine Corps fighter pilot, is thought to have spent about £134,000 ($200,000) on the two-seater Aero L-39 Albatros jet.

Ten ways you can put a stop to faulty brakes

A CAMPAIGN to inform drivers, especially women, about the dangers of faulty or ill-maintained brakes has been launched by Mintex Don, the leading manufacturer of brake pads.

It is believed that braking problems contribute to a significant number of accidents. And Mintex also discovered, while preparing the campaign, that women were on average paying more when their cars were serviced. There was evidence that garages were charging women for unnecessary replacement parts because they were assumed to understand less about their cars.

The "Driving Home Safety" campaign based on leaflets being distributed through garages and other outlets sets out 10 hints on brake maintenance:

☐ Check the brake pedal travel before every journey.

☐ Make sure replacement brake parts are high quality.

☐ Listen for noisy brakes. Get them checked if you hear anything unusual.

☐ If your car pulls to one side on braking, get it checked.

☐ Check the brake fluid reservoir once a week and keep it topped-up.

☐ Replace the fluid at the manufacturer's recommended intervals.

☐ Replace hydraulic components and flexible hoses as recommended.

☐ If brake pads or shoes wear out frequently under normal driving check the whole system. Modern brake pads and shoes should last a minimum of 15,000 miles.

☐ Ensure the system is checked regularly by a professional.

☐ In wet weather, remember brake performance will vary. Apply brakes softly to remove surplus water.

Polyurethane seat foam reprocessed into new foam-producing chemicals
Polypropylene carpets are recyclable as is cotton-fibre noise insulation which already contains recyclate
Plastic lemonade bottles are recycled into luggage racks and door padding
Chassis components can be remanufactured through an Exchange Parts programme, or recycled for steel manufacture
Glass is recyclable but laminated windscreens need extra processing
WHAT GOES INTO YOUR CAR?
Fluids-oil, water and coolant reprocessed
Engines, transmission, catalytic converters and radiators are remanufactured or recycled
Lead, polypropylene and acid in batteries can be recycled to new batteries
Wheel-arch liners made from recycled polypropylene can be recycled again
Bumpers produced from a polycarbonate blend, with brackets in a recyclate collected from a Ford scheme in Germany
Rubber tyres are not recyclable at the moment, but carcasses can be used for remould tyres
Old telephone and computer housings are recycled into radiator grilles

My car's a load of rubbish!

Millions of plastic bottles and other rubbish are being recycled as car parts, reports Vaughan Freeman

Cars made of junk from waste tips and which, cannibal-like, devour the used parts of their predecessors, will feature heavily in the environmentally-sound motoring world that is already taking shape.

In America, Ford cars and trucks are being built using plastic recovered from Coca Cola and Pepsi bottles, scrapped telephone casings and computer housings, and ground-up bumpers. Now the car giant is examining ways of ensuring its materials suppliers in the UK and the rest of Europe go "green" and supply its plants with so-called "post-consumer" recycled material.

Susan Day, Ford's vehicle recycling co-ordinator, says: "Plastic soda bottles are recycled into luggage racks and door padding. Old telephone and computer housings are recycled into grilles, and used tyres are transformed into brake-pedal pads.

"Cars are already one of the most recycled consumer products and we are trying to push it to the limits. But it has to make economic sense. We have told suppliers we want 25 per cent of the material they send us to have a post-consumer content — that is to have been used before as something else — at a price that matches or is lower than non-recycled material."

About 50 million plastic bottles a year are turned into bits for new Fords. The bottles are collected in roadside bins, or customers return them and collect a deposit at local shops.

The bottles, plus phone and computer housings, are cleaned up, then ground down into flakes before being reprocessed into pellets. These are then moulded into shapes such as inner door linings, or are mixed with glass for strength, before being shaped into headlight components, moulded front grilles on pick-up trucks, and roof-rack side rails on the US version of the Escort.

Even the plastic bottle tops are reused as fan shrouds which direct cool air from the radiator to the engine. Plastic battery housings become wheel-arch splash shields.

Might motorists baulk at driving a car cobbled together from old tyres and bottles? Day says: "Most of a car, 75 per cent by weight, is steel and metal, and all of that has been recycled from somewhere else already. We are talking here about the remaining 25 per cent, including plastics, textiles, rubber, adhesives, paint, glass and composites." She said no compromises would be made on quality or performance during the greening process.

Ford is also working on making cars easier to dismantle at the end of their useful lives. The firm hopes to establish in Europe centres at which engineers use computers to find out exactly what a vehicle's components are made of, how to strip them off — and how much the recycling market will pay for them.

In 1991, Ford opened a pilot disassembly plant in Germany to find ways of economically stripping a car of parts that can be used again. Seats of old cars are stripped down to their plastic, metal and foam components, and fluids such as radiator and air conditioning coolants are drained and reprocessed.

Wheel arches on the Mondeo are made from recycled polypropylene, and damaged plastic bumpers are ground down and remoulded into radiator grilles for new models.

HOW DOES IT WORK?

The diesel engine

IN A petrol engine, air and fuel are let into the cylinder at the same time. The mixture is compressed by the piston to a high pressure and ignited by the spark plug. The exploding mixture expands rapidly, driving down the piston, which rotates the crankshaft to generate power.

With the diesel engine, only air enters the cylinder initially. This is compressed to a much higher pressure than in the petrol engine. Just as a bicycle pump heats up as it compresses air, the effect of this compression is to heat the air to a very high temperature..

Diesel fuel is then sprayed into the cylinder in a fine mist to mix with the hot air. The mixture ignites spontaneously, expands, and drives down the piston for the power stroke.

Most commercial diesel engines use direct injection, the most efficient method, in which the fuel is sprayed direct into the cylinder. Most diesel cars use Indirect Injection, where fuel is injected first into a pre-chamber where the combustion process begins. The explosive mixture is then shot into the main cylinder through a narrow inlet. This speeds up combustion for faster engine running and makes for a smoother run, but is slightly less efficient.

The diesel engine is more efficient than the petrol because the fuel mixture is hotter and burns more efficiently, and because there is always enough air in the cylinder to burn all the fuel injected into it (in a petrol engine, this happens only when the car is going flat out).

INDUCTION Descending piston sucks air into cylinder through open inlet valve

COMPRESSION Inlet valve closes, ascending piston compresses and so heats air; fuel is injected
IGNITION Fuel, ignited by heated, compressed air, explodes and drives piston down
EXHAUST Exhaust valve opens, ascending piston pushes burnt gases out of cylinder

It's all a question of attitude. Heather Kirby takes the AA's new psychological self-assessment test for motorists

Get your driving brain in gear for a mental MoT

I am a safe driver, considerate of passengers and other road users and I rarely break the speed limit. This paragon profile emerged after I completed a psychological self-assessment computer programme.

The 48 questions are tailored to test attitude rather than driving skill because, according to Matthew Joint, assistant head of the AA's road safety unit who devised the questions, the difference between a good driver and a bad driver is attitude, the difference in skill is relatively small.

But what about the two cars I have written off? My answers show, he said, that I may be over-cautious and that could make me unsafe. "But nobody is perfect and one of the main skills is learning to deal with your mistakes."

The police said after one of my accidents that I should have hit the car which came out in front of me instead of swerving to avoid it and smashing into a tree. Mr Joint agrees. "You'll know next time," he assured me.

And what about the black ice which caused me to pulp a Mercedes? "Even if you had skid-pan training, by the time you realise you've hit black ice there is no time to react. Your attitude wasn't at fault and since you've had a long driving career it would be surprising if nothing untoward had happened.

"What keeps you out of trouble is learning to spot what makes a situation dangerous in the first place. The point about a psychology test is it makes you think more about the possibility of potential hazards and that is less painful. You learnt the hard way."

Although the Learner Driver Questionnaire is geared towards 16 to 19-year-olds, it also contains plenty of advice to help experienced drivers avoid taking risks. One part of the programme suggests giving yourself a mental MoT every two months by asking questions including, Have I had any near misses? Were they my fault? What could I have done to avoid them?

Mr Joint and his team used research from Southampton University which showed that young drivers are not unsafe because of lack of skill but because they don't use their skills. The Department of Transport is sending 5,000 copies of the questionnaire, which is on floppy disk, to state secondary schools as part of a spring road safety campaign and an adult version is being developed.

Andrew Howard, head of road safety for the AA, said: "Thirty-five per cent of young drivers have the wrong attitude and if we can start them thinking about the chinks in their personality we can start to remedy them."

The test is colourful and fun. After the self-assessment part you can click into a series of boxes which give advice, statistics and statements you have to decide are true or false. There are striking illustrations such as an elephant in the back seat of a car to emphasise the weight of a body being thrown through a windscreen and right-on messages about moody and mean drivers such as "alcohol knackers you out".

For information about the self-assessment test contact: Road Safety Unit, The Automobile Association, Norfolk House, Priestley Road, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG24 9NY. Tel: 0256-492192.

How students fared with the AA's test

THE first part of the AA's self-assessment test consists of 48 statements to which you can answer — strongly agree, agree, disagree or strongly disagree.

Here is a sample:

☐ If I cause an accident because of stupidity, I hope I am the one who gets hurt.

☐ I enjoy giving passengers the occasional scare.

☐ If you know how to handle a car you can take a few risks.

☐ It is easy to break speed limits accidentally.

☐ Being cautious takes all the fun out of driving.

Students attending the St Thomas the Apostle College, Nunhead, southeast London, whizzed through a sample test.

They said there was no point cheating because they were keen to know how good or bad they would be as drivers.

The final score is divided into six categories — oneself, others, on-board, risk, speed and safety. Someone who fails in any category can then call up a new series of computer information and images on that specific subject.

Older people, according to the AA's Matthew Joint, take far longer because they tend to try to work out what is the "correct" response.

The pupils were open about their failings, gleefully shouting out each other's "at risk" scores — "Hey, Malcolm knows nothing about safety!" "You're a danger to your passengers!" "Pete's failed every category!"

The computer programme is enjoyable and brightly coloured. Its quizzes, statistics and homilies are user-friendly.

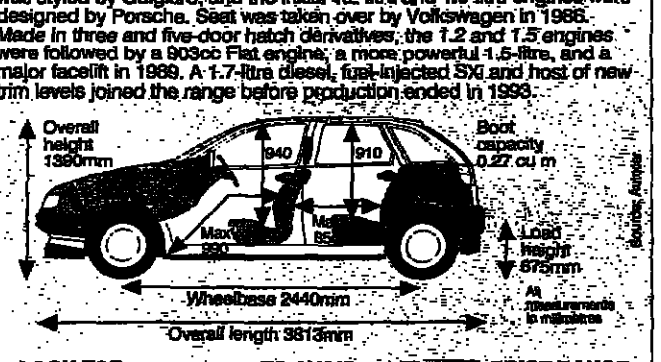
A statement in the "on-board influences" section was one many of the schoolboys recognised: "Some drivers treat their passengers as an audience they are desperate to impress." It was greeted with cries of — "My brother's like that, he goes round corners on two wheels." "His dad drives on the pavement!"

But they were more interested in the sobering statistics about young male drivers such as: "Young men are seven times more likely to die as passengers than anyone else". Their comments ranged from "I never knew that" to "That's scary."

USED CAR BRIEF

SEAT IBIZA

When it launched the front-wheel drive Ibiza in 1985 the Spanish firm drew on some of the most famous names in motoring history. The car was styled by Guigiaro, and the initial 1.2-litre and 1.5-litre engines were designed by Porsche. Seat was taken over by Volkswagen in 1986. Made in three and five-door hatch derivatives, the 1.2 and 1.5 engines were followed by a 903cc Fiat engine, a more powerful 1.5-litre, and a major facelift in 1989. A 1.7-litre diesel, fuel-injected SXi and host of new trim levels joined the range before production ended in 1993.



GOOD NEWS: Upmarket GLX and SXi models offer especially good value for money, with all sorts of creature comforts such as central locking, alloy wheels and electric windows. The 1.7-litre diesel engine was publicised as Britain's most economical when launched in 1990.

BAD NEWS: The low-geared steering can be surprisingly heavy for a small car, not helped by the fact that the front wheels are unusually susceptible to being knocked out of alignment by careless kerbing.

LOOK FOR: Cars built after the 1989 facelift are the most attractive proposition because they benefitted comprehensively from VW improvements, including uprated interiors.

TO AVOID: Pre-1986 cars, made before VW improved build quality and reliability.

PRICE RANGE: Expect to pay around £5,000 for 1993 K-reg 1.5-litre SXi three-door, £2,500 for a 1990 G-reg 1.5-litre GLX five-door and £4,000 for a 1993 K-reg 1.7-litre diesel SL.

INSURANCE: Cover from AA Insurance (0800 444777) on a Seat Ibiza GLX will cost a 55-year old male, with full no claims bonus living in Winchester £163.25 a year for comprehensive cover. A similar female will pay £148.63. A 22-year old male with one year's no claims bonus living in south London will pay £471 fully comprehensive, and a similar female will pay £417.

REPLACEMENT PARTS: (Prices include VAT); Clutch assembly £130; full exhaust £260; front damper £60; rear damper £65; front brakepads £25; alternator £210; starter motor £200; tyre £40.

SAFETY RATING: The Ibiza comes in the middle of its class according to latest Department of Transport analysis of risk of driver injury. It puts the Ibiza ahead of the Nissan Sunny, Peugeot 309 and Skoda Estelle, but behind the Rover 200/400 and Citroen ZX.

OVERALL: An inexpensive car, made all the more attractive as the arrival of the new Ibiza in 1993, based on the VW Polo, pushed down prices of the original version. Late-model, highly specified cars provide VW-based motoring as an economical alternative to dearer rivals.

BUYING a new car is now not so much a question of which model to choose, but which is the best package of "goodies" and discounts available.

However, evidence is growing that price is the key to a deal with many buyers, including purchasers of company cars, increasingly confused and irritated by the package offers from dealers and manufacturers.

PHH, the vehicle management company, discovered 64 per cent of fleet managers were against offers such as free mobile telephones from Ford and Vauxhall. Nearly seven in ten fleet managers just wanted lower sticker prices in the showrooms, worried that free gifts might carry tax implications and ultimately be paid for by their companies anyway.

The National Franchised Dealers' Association has long claimed that the special discounts offered to company car buyers were subsidised by private buyers who pay about 10 per cent, or £1,000, more for the family runabout as a result.

THIS IS THE FULL LIST OF NUMBERS ON OFFER. THE LOTS WILL NOT BE OFFERED IN THIS ORDER. SEE CATALOGUE FOR DETAILS. E & OE.

DVLA has chosen a venue with a difference for its next sale of exclusive and prestigious registrations from its Classic Collection.

Television's Baker Street Set - famous for its Sherlock Holmes series - provides the backdrop to add a special atmosphere to an already unique occasion.

This auction provides an ideal opportunity for you, the discerning motorist to acquire an unissued registration whilst enjoying the attractions offered by Granada Studios Tour. These include the best known street in the world - Coronation Street*, the set of the House of Commons and other experiences including Soundstage, Laser Show and Motion Master.

Guideline prices in the catalogue start from just £1000. DVLA's catalogue provides entry for 2 persons on sale days to both the auction and the attractions of Granada Studios Tour.

* availability subject to filming schedules

BIDDING FOR YOUR REGISTRATION

IN PERSON-AT THE AUCTION - easily the best way in the relaxed atmosphere of Baker Street.

☎ BY PHONE - We phone you from the auction. You're in control of the bidding and it's almost as good as being there.

BY POST - let us know the maximum you'll pay and we'll bid for you - and you could well buy below that figure.

Whatever bidding method you choose, you must obtain a catalogue.

IMPORTANT: Proof of identity is required before bids are accepted. An £80 assignment fee is payable at the time of purchase. All purchases are subject to a buyer's premium and VAT.

The car that never says die

BY ALAN COPPS

MICHAEL DAVISON drives 33,000 miles a year. So in the past eleven years he has travelled the equivalent of 16 times around the world — in one car: a Mercedes 500SE he bought new in 1984.

It has 402,000 miles on the clock and has had only one minor breakdown. Mr Davison, a company director, travels constantly between his home in Bedfordshire and farms in Cambridgeshire and Norfolk. "But when I come to a farm, this car has to work. It takes me everywhere along the farm tracks."

A Mercedes driver for more than 20 years, Mr Davison has now set a target of half a million miles.

The extraordinary reliability of the petrol car means running costs have been limited to fuel, servicing and new tyres every 35,000 miles. The battery was replaced after 286,000 miles. The only involuntary stop was due to a broken throttle spring — replaced at a cost of 6p.

Davison: on and on

Sexy models aim to drive you crazy

Anna Maxted

reports on why some cars exude a sense of the erotic

When the design of a particular Lotus was first exhibited to the company's board, one director was so overcome he declared that he wanted to smear it in olive oil and rub his naked body all over it.

A sports car excites the passions in a way that a dumper truck never could, and if you've ever drooled over the soft curves of a Porsche 911 and dreamed of driving it into the sunset — congratulations are due to its designer, who considered every emotion that he wanted his creation to arouse in you.

The first programme of Auto Erotic, a three-part series on car design, narrated by comedian and car fanatic Steve Coogan, (next Tuesday on Channel 4, 9pm) explores why certain sports cars are perceived as masculine or feminine, how a bump or a scoop in their bodywork can evoke strength, speed and vitality — irrespective of engine power — and why some cars exude sex appeal.

According to the producer, Camilla Deakin, a car is seductive in its power of suggestion. "The body of the Lamborghini has curves which run into one another like a woman's hips turn into the waist and the breast. The light darts along the curve of the car and accentuates its flowing shape. If a designer wants a more masculine look, he'll break the curve, as men's bodies are more angular."

Anthropological influences in cars are occasionally blatant, with striking results. The 1966 Lamborghini Muira has black grilling around its headlamps which mimics the heavy eye make-up of Sixties designers such as Mary Quant. This elaborate detail contrasts with the rest of the design, which is quite simple.

At the opposite end of the spectrum is the AC Cobra, an uncompromisingly masculine car. Its chunky exterior indicates the presence of an enormous engine beneath its skin, and its wide tyres are reminiscent of the racetrack. Peter Stevens, designer of the McLaren F1, likens it "to one of those strange bodybuilders. It's over-muscled. Some women ooh and ah when they see one, but it's a bit much for most."

Can we assume then, that the male owner of a Muira regards it as a girlfriend substitute, and that a man drives a Cobra to compensate for his lack of virility? Certainly not, says Mr Stevens: "The willy-extension theory is out of date. Customers for these expensive cars are doing all right in that department because they inevitably come along with a suntanned bimbo. Money is the aphrodisiac, not the car."

He admits that some men do polish their sports cars a little more lovingly than befits an inanimate object. But this, says Mr Stevens, is because devotion to a Ferrari allows a restrained Englishman to show emotion without being dubbed a sissy. He adds: "People like washing cars with a flowing shape, but I don't think they subconsciously believe they're putting suntan oil on their girlfriend's back. I don't think a car is a girlfriend substitute. It may be additional."

"The black grilling around its headlamps mimics the heavy eye make-up of Sixties designers such as Mary Quant."

But sports cars are primarily sexy not because of their respective cylinders or curves, but because of the glamour they represent. They are exclusive, expensive, they suggest vibrancy and a dangerous lifestyle: qualities which many people associate with sexuality. But don't be swept away by emotion and engine power. Sports cars are most unsuitable for romantic activity. Mr Stevens says: "The Austin Healey was stupid. You had to fold the back of the seat flat and persuade your girlfriend to get into the boot. That's why hippies have camper vans."

Road hogs: The inside story

Q Why don't the police do something about those stupid drivers who overtake on the inside? They are a danger to everyone.

A "Undertakers", as people who overtake on the inside are known, are a danger and the police are doing something. Moves to sanction undertaking, once considered by ministers, were firmly kicked into touch by the police who see the results daily in mangled metal and bodies. So, motorway police in the Midlands this week started a campaign to keep an eye on bad drivers, some of whom show no more self-discipline than England soccer fans.

Q But what will the police actually do?

A Patrol cars on the M6, M5 and M42 have been programmed with 50 messages, which range from "Do not pass" to "Put Your Phone Down" for drivers who have their mobiles glued to their ears. The messages can be flashed in six languages.

Q How can that help stop the "undertakers" going about their daily business of scaring us half to death?

A The police say they are also on the lookout for drivers who either don't understand or don't want to know about lane discipline. That ranges from lane "hogs" to the daft drivers who use all three lanes because they think they should go quicker than everyone else. "By far the most common reason for tailbacks and delays is poor lane discipline," said John Burbeck, West Mercia's assistant chief constable.

Q So how do we avoid being pulled over by police — and being buzzed by the "undertakers"?

A Simply follow the rules. Motorways are not divided, as some drivers seem to believe, into a slow lane, a fast lane and a very fast lane. The outside two lanes are for overtaking and not for cruising. Don't sit in the middle lane just because it is convenient at 70mph. That is when drivers trapped behind get irritated and provoked into doing something silly.

Q But the middle lane is out of the way of lorries and the "Flash Harrys" of the outside lane who travel at much more than the speed limit. Moving from lane to lane is terrifying.

A Possibly, but that is no answer. There should be no danger if you follow the simple procedure: mirror, signal, manoeuvre. Check all is clear behind, put the indicators on and move across. When you have finished passing, go back to your lane again using the same procedure. The key is to be sure it is safe to move, even by glancing over the right shoulder, and then signalling clearly.

Q We will probably still be challenged by "undertakers" though. They have no worries about going inside because they travel so fast.

A No doubt you will not win a confrontation with the pottiest drivers on the motorways. But the best thing is to let them get on with it and stay well out of their way. They are clearly "hyped up" and going to overtake one way or the other so just let them get on with it. No use both of you having a coronary for the sake of a couple of seconds of driving. Just turn the radio up and relax.

Alan Copps on the one-door wonder that set a struggling German car maker on the road to riches

BMW boom was born in a bubble

A 1950s favourite that fetched huge prices in the 1980s celebrates its 40th birthday this weekend

A cute little mover: the bubble car's size made it ideal in traffic

Family favourite: thousands bought the bubble, partly prompted by adverts like that shown left

One of the most endearing and improbable vehicles to have travelled the roads of Europe marks its 40th birthday tomorrow. It was light enough to be lifted by two strong men yet thousands were used as family transport. Stirling Moss and his wife Susie still occasionally drive one around London.

At the height of the classic car boom in the 1980s, prices soared to as much as £30,000, enthusiasts went ex-directory and the location of the barn that held one British collection was kept secret for fear of "rustling".

Put a young car enthusiast in front of one now, however, and he would probably stare in disbelief at the blue and white badge: for the Isetta bubble car was a BMW. Its production in tens of thousands from 1955 is credited with getting the Bavarian company back on its feet after the difficult post-war years, and laying the foundation for the successful series of sporty saloons that have made it one of the prestige marques today.

Bubble cars were something of a speciality for the Germans in the 1950s. Together with BMW, both Messerschmitt and Heinkel, unable to continue aircraft production, turned out these simple, tiny but well-constructed vehicles for a nation desperate for economical transport. Their British rivals, such as the Bond and Frisky, never had quite the same appeal, although they, too, are now collectors' items.

The Isetta was, in the words of BMW, a case of form following function, a philosophy still followed by the company today. The requirement was for a vehicle able to seat two in comfort, carry a small amount of luggage and consume a minimum amount of fuel. The road space occupied followed directly from these compact demands, and it cost just under £275.

Perhaps its most ingenious feature was its door, in effect the entire front of the car: open wide, get in upright and then sit comfortably. Even the upper part of the steering column, complete with steering wheel and instrument panel, swung out on the left-hand hinged door, to facilitate easy access.

The 250cc single-cylinder motorcycle engine was powerful enough to push the 794lb vehicle along at up to 53mph. When you could weave in and out of traffic almost as nimbly as a motorcycle and park easily between two already-parked larger cars, speed didn't seem important.

Driving the Isetta with a passenger was said to be more comfortable if you knew the person well. The steering wheel and pedals were in the same place as those on an ordinary car and the gear lever for the four-speed box was placed conveniently to the driver's left. The company still boasts that if the clutch failed, the car could be driven quite happily without it, starting with a gentle roll in first gear.

The wide track of the front wheels gave the stability and road-holding of a four-wheel car, while the narrow track at the rear gave the manoeuvrability of a motorcycle. Publicity shots of the time showed a smiling child happily sharing the tiny space with mother and father, although many who rode in them remember the experience with a certain amount of pain.

The death knell for the bubble car was sounded in 1959 with the revolutionary design of the Mini, but by then BMW had played a host of variations on the Isetta theme. There was a convertible, a souped-up 300cc version, a mini-van and a special version with just one rear wheel that allowed people in some countries to drive the vehicle on a motorcycle licence rather than face a full driving test.

There was also the BMW 600, the four-seat version that is still run by Stirling Moss. It is identical to the Isetta at the front with the widely hinged door, but had a 600cc motorcycle engine pushing out 19.5bhp to carry a family in comfort. "It's great to drive on a gloomy day because the sight of it makes people smile," says Susie Moss.

Production stopped in 1962 when BMW introduced the 1500, the "great grandfather" of today's 3 series. The concept of the bubble car, or at least the micro-mini, still pops up regularly at motor shows, but none has had the same impact as the Isetta and its contemporaries.

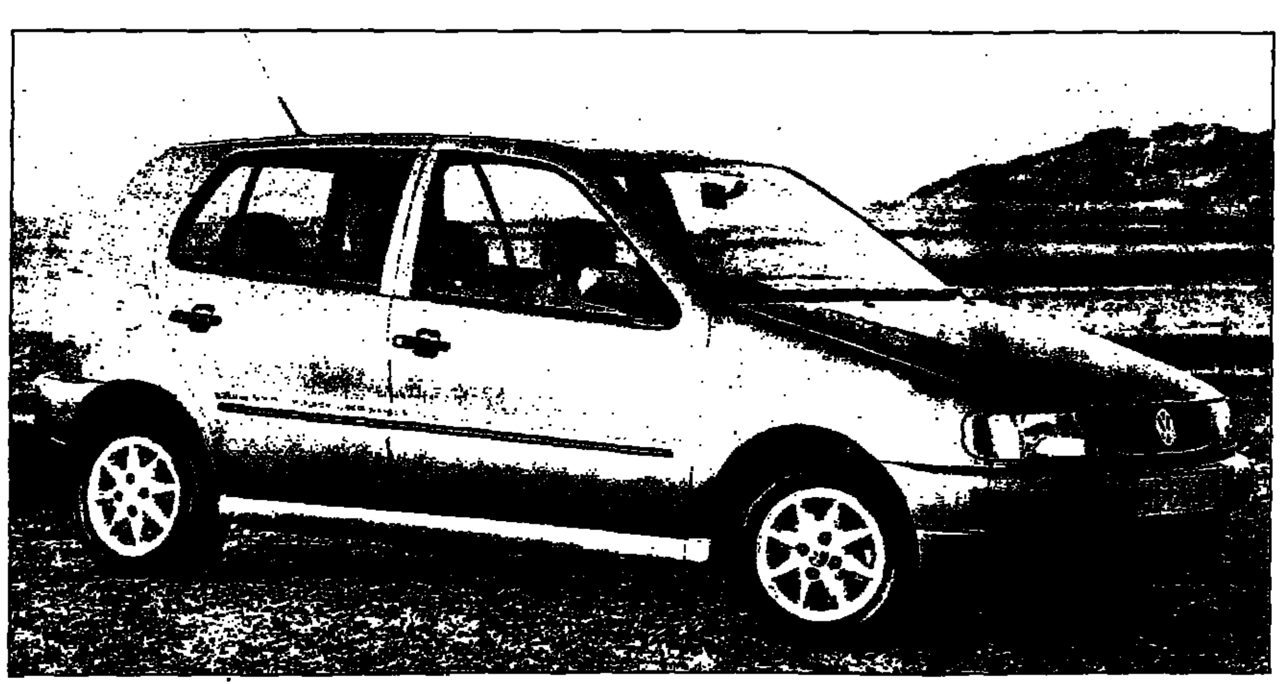
A full-scale revival is unlikely because the shape of the Isetta, with its flat, vulnerable front, would not meet today's more stringent safety requirements.

Hundreds survive in the hands of enthusiasts, however, and with environmental pressures favouring smaller and smaller cars, there are plenty who believe the bubble has not finally burst.

Isetta Owners' Club, 111 Heronscroft, Covingham, Swindon, Wiltshire SN3 5AW.

Reborn Polo is a wheel little sweetie

What was once a shopping trolley for the old has been hugely improved, says Kevin Eason



The roomy, smooth Polo 1.6GL, £10,499, top speed 107mph, gives 32.8mpg around town. Insurance group 7

There was a time when I would have to be dragged kicking and screaming into a small hatchback, they were such nasty, unpleasant things. They were all too cramped, too noisy and too uncomfortable ... and then came Volkswagen's new Polo.

The chaps at VW have been having a hard time of it lately. After the runaway successes of the Beetle and Golf, somebody seemed to have thrown away the design studio's best pencil. The next generation of cars were worthy enough — the latest Golf and Passat, for example — but so dull that even John Major could outshine them.

Then came the Polo. What a minor miracle this little car is; it not only looks good but rides and handles as well as many bigger rivals, and is comfortable and roomy.

British buyers have long known the Polo as the shopping trolley of the elderly. You know the sort: him in the driver's seat with the trilby and her in sensible hat and overcoat, even on a stifling summer's day, the happy pair trundling along at 20mph with indicators treated as an optional extra. The occupants were usually as interesting as their hatchback, which looked as gloomy as it could be while its rivals were all surging into new shapes and styles.

The Polo came only as a three-door, which ruled it out of 60 per cent of sales in the market for small hatchbacks which demanded five-door cars. Even so, its qualities of proven reliability and sturdiness managed to outweigh its dogged dullness to the point that more than 440,000 have been sold in this country in the past 20 years.

Then came the new Polo. Clearly, somebody had given the Wolfsburg designers their pencil back, because this is about the only small hatchback I would want to own. For a start, son of Polo has put on some beef: the new car is 85mm wider and 75mm taller than its predecessor and feels it, with lots of leg, head and elbow room.

VW's designers have also played a clever trick by lengthening the distance between the wheels by 65mm to 2,400mm, exactly the same wheelbase as the original and much larger Golf. Yet the Polo is 50mm shorter than the old version, with the wheels tucked tightly to each corner of the car.

That has transformed the ride. Small cars normally feel every bump because the chassis has so little time to absorb the impact on the front wheels before the rear wheels come along and take the same battering. The Polo's extra wheelbase helps to smooth the ride and irons out even the most potholed city streets.

I tested the 1.6GL, a model that retails at about £10,000 with all the electrical gadgets you could want. German companies have traditionally been reluctant to offer lots of extras as standard but their reticence has been swept away by the need to compete head-on with gadget-laden rivals from the likes of Ford and Vauxhall. So the Polo in GL form comes with electric sunroof, anti-lock brakes and power steering.

I have no idea whether VW intended the end result but what they have produced is the perfect executive mini-cruiser for the 1990s. Consider the average company car driver, plying his or her trade up and down the motorways in cars much too big for the job. The excuse is that they deserve the home comforts that a big car gives — but they do burn up a gallon of petrol every 25 miles.

'This small car is the perfect executive cruiser for the 1990s'

Buy a Polo instead, get an extra 10 miles to the gallon and still enjoy plenty of comfort. Parking is easier — power steering is standard on all but the base models — insurance premiums are lower and the Polo is prettier.

There is no disturbing engine or tyre noise at motorway speeds and the little car has enough acceleration to keep even the heaviest right foot in the fleet happy.

VW has also, at last, addressed the issue of security, not one of its top subjects in the past. Every petrol-engine model comes with an electronic immobiliser and there are also new Sony security radios with removable fronts. VW says the radio fascia can be popped into a pocket when you leave the car but I think the idea is a pain; I have left more than enough radio fronts in jackets, office drawers and restaurants. Why not just fit an integral coded system, like clever Vauxhall?

That is carping, for the Polo offers a driving environment that few cars — big or small — can match. It feels more robust than French or Italian rivals, better designed than anything from Britain and sets new standards for comfort.

It is an excellent little car and you would not have to drag me into it at all. I would go happily, even whistling and looking forward to the trip. If only all small cars were like this.

Helen Mound relives her 'privileged' education

One L of a lesson in how to rally

What's it like at 100mph on mud? Damned scary

OH, mother, why didn't I listen to you? "Get a nice job," she said. "Something feminine." Had I listened, I wouldn't be taking my first ride in a rally car, watching Welsh forest flash inches past my nose, unfocused, with my breakfast threatening to make an untimely return.

I'm the only female motoring writer "privileged" to ride in one of Renault's new Clio Williams rally cars. Strapped in the only passenger seat of this shelled-out 130mph hatchback, on a miserable, cold, wet day, with mud splattering in from all angles and every tree in north Wales hurtling towards us at impossible speeds, there's little I can do but practice holding my breath.

My tormentor is Renault's great new hope, 26-year-old Robbie Head, the youngest-ever winner of the RAC Rally's production car title. He's an amiable young Scot with a soft Lanarkshire accent and remarkable mild manners, but right now the red mist is over his eyes. Two and a half miles of treacherous, wet, hard-flint forest-track lie ahead, and he is ready to obliterate absolutely anything that gets in his path.

Tearing around forests in a £90,000 rally car, leaping logs, making spectacular 360 degree handbrake turns, and straining my neck muscles in an attempt to keep my head attached to my shoulders, is not my idea of fun. Particularly when I'm not in control and am supposed to have my head buried in a map.

After two days practice, the forest tracks are incredibly greasy, but that doesn't slow Robbie. Oh, Nicole, if you could see what this man is doing to your beloved Clio. "What do you mean, this is the straight?" We're doing 100mph through a series of bends you can't see round and he calls this a straight. There's a sixth gear to go and the car is still pulling like a three-year-old in Hamleys.

A quick flick on the steering wheel, Robbie snatches the handbrake feverishly and we're speeding out of a 180 degree spin towards yet more trees. Chunks of slate are clattering in the wheelarches and the Clio's rear-end is slithering about like a duck on a frozen pond.

The wipers are making a pathetic attempt to clear the muddy water from the windscreen, but it's sufficient to see the crater ahead. Oh boy, this is going to hurt. There's a sickening crack as the Clio jolts in and out of the flint-filled hole at 90mph — was it a tree, the car ... or my neck?

Ready for action: the author with driver Robbie Head

IN truth, with Robbie's eight years experience in rallying, I couldn't be in safer hands. I'm surprised by the overwhelming sensation of speed inside these cars, but I am also genuinely amazed at how smoothly he can extract the performance. Contrary to the outside impression that rallying is mayhem, from the inside there's not the least feeling that the driver is out of control.

Robbie, who is both an accomplished rally hand and an experienced test and development driver, will be at the forefront of Renault's assault on the Mobil 1/Top Gear British Rally Championship. There will be two cars in the company's team, the other driven by Frenchman Alain Orielle, a former world rally champion. The co-driver who surrendered his seat to me is Ulsterman Terry Harryman, one of the UK's top rally navigators.

Andrew Pierce meets a driving force behind 10cc, on the road again

'Only give cars to people in odd-numbered houses'

STEERING COLUMN

One of the biggest selling bands of the 1970s, the mighty 10cc, are making a comeback. They have re-released their most popular hit, I'm Not In Love, with the help of Paul McCartney, Tim Rice and George Martin. Graham Gouldman, pianist and guitarist, and a driving force behind the band, is delighted to be back on the road.

How did you first learn to drive?

I passed after nine lessons with my father, who always warned me that every other driver was a lunatic. He's right. I was working at Bargains Unlimited, a gents' outfitters in Salford. My heart wasn't in it. I used to arrive late and sneak off early in the car, to play in a band. I was sacked. It was the best thing that ever happened to me.

What was your first car?

A yellow Triumph Vitesse. It was good for pulling. But then whatever car I drove seemed to be good for that. It seemed go with the job of a pop star.

What car do you drive now and why?

A metallic blue Mercedes 260E. It's reliable, safe and stylish. Rather like me.

Do you enjoy driving?

Yes. It gives me a chance to listen to all the music I want to, at whatever volume, without fear of distraction from my wife and children. I have some of my best lyrical ideas when I drive on the M62. For some reason it has a meditative quality."

What is your dream car?

An Aston Martin Virage. One of my first cars was an Aston Martin Volante, which cost £15,000 in the 1960s. It drew huge crowds wherever I went. If only the band had the same effect in the earliest days.

What is your most hated car?

Anything which has been stretched. The Volvo, for instance. Horrible.

What is your worst habit in the car?

I think I am a perfect driver so I had to ask my wife. She says when the radio is on I sing and harmonise to the discomfort of my passengers, who must be oblivious to the fact I am a musician. When I play the steering wheel, I apparently endanger the entire family.

What infuriates you most about other drivers?

Motorists who drive up behind me. If it's during the day I put my sidelights on as if I am braking. To no avail. Three times they have gone into the back of the beloved Mercedes.

What is the most unusual thing you have done in your car?

The obvious I will not discuss. But I once enjoyed an eight-course Indian meal, complete with cutlery and napkins, with the rest of 10cc. The onion bhajis were amazing. But the smell lingered for weeks. It was a bit messy on the front seat.

Have you ever had points on your licence?

I was done for parking on a zig zag crossing outside an off-licence as I was stocking up with drinks for Christmas. I begged the beak not to ban me as I needed the car to drive home to Rochdale from the studio at 3am every day. He missed the point. He told me, in deadly earnestness, to consult the bus timetable. Apart from the fact there are no buses at 3am, I didn't fancy the extra fare for my guitar and keyboards!

What do you listen to in the car?

As there is so much music in my life, I listen to plays on Radio 4 or BBC talking books.

If you were Secretary of State for Transport, what is the first thing you would do?

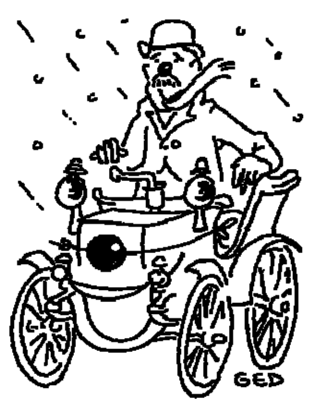
I would halve the number of cars in Britain by allowing only the people who live in odd-numbered houses to have a car. I don't think it's at all harsh. I live at number 21.

What is your favourite car ad?

Nicole and Papa. Because it's only got two words in it.

SIMON WALKER

Gouldman: "My Mercedes is safe and stylish . . . like me."



Initiatives in selling help boost charities

BY MAURICE GLOVER

SPRING is traditionally the time when a crop of new ideas are introduced to accelerate car sales out of the gloom of winter. Motorists in the North East, though, are discovering that the selling season's green shoots have arrived early.

Two dealerships on Tyneside have found novel ways to encourage customers into their showrooms, while at the same time helping charities.

In Sunderland, the RNLI and the local aircraft museum are among organisations allowed free use of huge high street showrooms for fund-raising activities.

Each Saturday, Bristol Street Motors staff clear used cars from the company's premises to make 2,000 square feet of floor space available to charities. Unlimited supplies of tea, coffee and soft drinks are provided at no cost.

"It sounds a bit wacky but the take-up has been tremendous," said general manager Mike Doddsworth.

At the Bristol Street branch in Newcastle, sales manager Martin Davison has adorned his entire display of new cars with red noses. For each vehicle sold on March 17, the culmination of this year's comic relief appeal, the garage will donate £25. It expects to raise more than £500.

Small talk bound to fill buyers with confidence

Superminis are this year's hot buy with safe, fast, but small cars — loaded with the sort of creature comforts and technology usually associated with far larger vehicles — tipped as the best long-term value-for-money buys now available (Vaughan Freeman writes).

Vauxhall has put the supermini back firmly into the limelight with the launch of its stylish two-door Tigra.

Such interest in small cars is not likely to wane, which will ensure their used values stay ahead of the market. Ford has unveiled intriguing drawings of its Ka micro-car, smaller even than the Fiesta, and Mercedes-Benz is also planning to enter the supermini market over the next few years.

The arrival of such cars will again generate more interest and sustain the future values of cars, bought new or used, such as the Tigra, Rover 100 and VW Polo, according to Mark Cowling, chief economist with specialists in future car values, CAP Nationwide Motor Research.

He says: "The old adage, small is beautiful, has nearly always held true in the used car market since the introduction of the first superminis. For 1995, it is the mini and the supermini-sized cars which, whether new or used, will give drivers the best value-for-money."

He emphasised that fuel costs which will rise at least 20 per cent over the next three years, increasing traffic congestion, and the increased comfort, safety and performance of smaller cars, are the factors ensuring that the second-hand superminis will keep their values better than cars in any other size sector.

Mr Cowling added: "The fundamentals underpinning the demand for small cars, such as ever-rising fuel and running costs, remain in place. Insurance is lower, they are pretty, they are cheap and they are easier to park.

"Prices for such cars are at a relatively low point and we expect that in three years' time a mini or supermini purchased now will prove good value whether bought new or used."

This summer in particular a peculiar set of circumstances mean that new cars, including superminis, will be especially good value, with discounts of up to £1,500 expected to be on offer.

During June and July private buyers traditionally desert the showrooms, saving their cash and awaiting August when their new car will carry the latest registration plate. In response, dealers traditionally offer tempting pre-August discounts.

This annual shortage of forecourt customers will be aggravated this year because car fleet buyers too will be absent from the new car market until August.

Company car managers annually buy more than half of all new cars sold in Britain. This summer they will be delaying purchases until, coincidentally, August 1, when a change in rules for value-added tax comes into effect regarding leased company cars.

The change will save car fleets thousands of pounds on cars bought after August 1 and company car buyers are expected to steer clear of the showrooms until after the change to take advantage.

Mr Cowling said: "I believe that this summer, particularly June and July, could be one of the best times to buy a new car, and that on top of the usual discounts, dealers will be offering further incentives.

"Manufacturers have got their cash flows to keep going and that means there have to be some deals on prices in the summer."

South Koreans plan innovative invasion

THE most ambitious assault on the British car market will start next month when the first Daewoo models start arriving in showrooms that look more like self-contained exhibition centres.

The South Korean manufacturer — which calls itself the best known name you have never heard of — has decided on a radical departure from the conventional notion of a showroom by opening big out-of-town sales sites. They will have cafes and children's play areas so potential buyers can browse at leisure without feeling pressurised.

Salesmen will be paid on salary not commission, and as many as 16 different variants of the company's Nexia and Espero models, costing up to £13,000, will be on show.

Daewoo has invested £150 million in the showrooms, which should create around 2,000 sales and administration jobs over the next two years.

Cynics who have suggested the company will not survive without an established dealer network may have to think again if Daewoo's innovative approach succeeds. Although there will be service facilities available in big towns, maintenance and repair will also be available at 136 sites owned by Halfords.

The biggest problem Daewoo faces is building awareness of a brand almost totally unknown in the West but which is big in the Far East.

Daewoo is the world's 33rd largest company with a manufacturing portfolio which stretches from space technology to trains.

Tiredness kills. Robert Porter on a project to stop drivers falling asleep at the wheel

A weary volunteer is monitored driving a simulated route at Loughborough University. Some nodded off for several minutes without realising

State-of-the-art computers have helped complete a vital research programme to cut road deaths caused by tiredness.

The aim of the programme, funded by Ford and carried out by Aberdeen, Loughborough and Stirling universities, is to produce an in-car warning system which will advise tired drivers when it is time to take a break. The system would detect, via electronic sensors, when a driver's responses became "ragged" as tiredness affected judgment.

Researchers hope to save hundreds of lives each year. Inquests often hear that fatal collisions, many involving drivers who had been at the wheel for hours, occurred for no explicable reason. One accident thought to have involved driver fatigue was the school coach crash on the M40 15 months ago, in which 13 children and a teacher were killed.

Human error, often due to tiredness, is responsible for 70 per cent of all road accidents. Experiments by Ford at its Dunton research headquarters in Essex have shown that weary drivers can nod off at the wheel and wake up without even knowing they have slept.

In tests at Loughborough University, volunteers were kept awake for 24 hours and then put in vehicle simulators for 40 minutes. Some fell asleep within five minutes, slept until awoken after the test period and then took the wheel again as though they had simply nodded off for a few seconds. It was thought 40 minutes would not be long enough for the test; but nobody managed to stay awake for the whole period.

Ford set out to monitor the onset of tiredness by providing a Scorpio fitted with dual controls, and equipped with electronic sensors attached to everything in the car with which the driver came into contact. These were linked to a large computer in the boot, in a car conversion exercise believed to have cost more than £250,000. Drivers' brain activity was also monitored by EEG (electro-encephalogram).

Over three years, thousands of driver-hours were logged on motorways, test tracks and vehicle simulators. Closed-circuit cameras were installed to measure drivers' eye movements as tiredness set in. Most alarming, perhaps, was that most drivers either failed to recognise or ignored the physical warnings that their alertness was becoming blunted. They refused to pull off for a coffee and a rest and seemed to think that if they carried on they could "drive through it."

Discs recording hundreds of thousands of driver responses were sent to Stirling University and fed into neural networks — computer programmes which can learn by experience — where they were analysed.

Kevin Swingler, research fellow in charge of the programme at Stirling, explained: "Monitoring brain activity gave us a very good idea of how alert a person is. But because it would not be practical for motorists to drive around with wires attached to their heads, we needed to predict in advance how changes in steering and handling of controls could measure tiredness.

"Ford went out and tested 60 drivers at the wheel. All the EEG data was then decoded by an expert in brain sleep patterns. Finally, all the material was fed into our computer, which can 'learn' from all this data."

The computer programme had slowly evolved an accurate model of normal driving behaviour as it evaluated more and more information. After thousands of such assessments, it was possible to create a behaviour pattern which fitted nearly every driver.

The "learning" computer would then devise a standard warning programme which could be installed in new cars at comparatively little cost. Tiredness warnings would probably consist of a row of dashboard lights which would flash with increasing intensity.

"The cost would definitely not be a problem," Mr Swingler said. "The real issue is persuading people to act on the warnings." The three-year research project had been completed, he said, and "whatever happens now will be up to Ford."

● Matthew Joint, the AA's behaviour analyst, advises: "Never drive for more than three hours without a break. Stop for at least 20 minutes and don't just sit in the car, take a brisk walk.

"The best exercise, I am told, is belly dancing, but perhaps it is better not to risk arrest."

Dead tired: a lethal M-way menace

BY ANNE MARIE SAPSTED

ABOUT 16 per cent of all road accidents and more than 20 per cent of those on motorways are sleep-related, according to Professor Jim Horne of the Sleep Research Laboratory at Loughborough University.

His research in the British Medical Journal this week suggests that young males are particularly at risk. The professor based his findings on figures for accidents on all roads in the southwest of England from 1987 to 1992 and on data from the six Midlands police forces which make up the central motorway group in Birmingham.

His research underlines concern that while fatigue has already been recognised as a problem for heavy goods and public service vehicle drivers, whose hours are regulated by law, company car drivers, who are outside the scope of such legislation, may spend even longer at the wheel.

Research in America indicates that 13 per cent of road deaths are the result of drivers falling asleep. This is supported by research in Germany and Israel. Professor Horne's data also reflects their findings that there are two peak times for accidents: the early hours of the morning, especially 2am-3am, and the mid-afternoon, when the body's circadian rhythms, which govern sleep patterns, are at a low ebb.

His research also shows that male drivers aged 20-30 accounted for half of sleep-related accidents and that the chance of death or serious injury in such cases was higher than in "normal" accidents.

Be a successful writer

Make money writing - even while you are learning

HOW DOES IT WORK?

Top professional writers give you individual tuition as you work through the School's comprehensive home-study course. You are given assignments to complete at your own pace and these are edited and commented on by your own tutor, who works with you on a one-to-one basis.

You get personal tips that have taken years to evolve and which are passed on with astonishing results.

There's no real pleasure in writing unless you can get published. Seeing your own words in print is unforgettably satisfying. And if you're actually paid, too, you know that other people recognise the quality of your writing.

Since 1949, The Writing School has been teaching people how to write articles, short stories, novels, romances, radio and TV scripts. Equally important, we've been teaching students how to sell what they write.

"The reason for this success is my tutor, who has constructively criticised my work and given me invaluable help and assistance." M.L.Lowestoft

"I must say a few words in praise of my tutor. He has been excellent, first class in his guidance and his gentle remarks have contained an immense amount of professional knowledge which is sometimes difficult to understand from reading books." J.S.Cardiff

YOU'LL EARN AS YOU LEARN

Your tutor will give you specific advice on the selling process. Read what some of our students say . . .

"I have just received a cheque for £305 for two short stories." E.G.Harrow

"Since enrolling in the Writing School 12 months ago, I have earned £1,312." S.B.Market Bosworth

"I had a successful February, getting work included in three publications and earning £650 in total." N.N.Maidstone

"It's the first piece of work I've submitted and I can hardly believe my luck! They have offered me £100 for it." V.C.Plymouth

"AM I REALLY QUALIFIED?"

If you want to write and are reasonably literate, yes. In fact, if you've read this far, there's no doubt of your capability to take the course.

If you have a serious ambition to write you can gain invaluable help from the School. And, what's more, you'll find the whole process enjoyable, too!

"The Writing School has given me a chance to break the ice into a career in writing. Whether the published piece of work is small or major, the most important thing at the end of the day is to see your name in print." V.O'M.County Mayo, Eire

HOW LONG DOES IT TAKE?

You decide. You can work for 5 minutes or 5 hours at a time, whenever and wherever it suits you. You can finish the course quickly ... or slowly. We don't mind. In fact, there's no time limit!

"I enjoyed the course immensely though it took a little longer than I anticipated. My tutors were excellent, always ready with constructive criticism and friendly advice. I feel that I have been through a definitive learning process." S.T. Bishop Auckland

AND YOU CAN'T LOSE

We're so confident that our Students will be successful writers that if you have not recovered the cost of your tuition by the time you have completed your course, your fees will be refunded in full.

Take the first step to becoming a successful writer now. Simply fill in the coupon and send it to us. You won't need a stamp. Or even more simply, call us, free. We'll send you our FREE book about "Writing for Pleasure and Profit" and full details of our FREE 15-day trial offer.

CHANNEL-HOPPING

And tonight's theme is . . .

David Flusfeder makes his pick of the week's programmes across all channels

Adam Faith in Joint Ventures, part of Channel 4's Pot Night

POT NIGHT
Today, Saturday, Channel 4, 8pm-4.15am

I WAS expecting lots of moody visuals and ambient sounds and re-run episodes of Batman and The Prisoner and impossibly weird sitcoms like One Man And His Dog. But no. If the pot-heads tune in tonight hoping for some television thrills to match their chemical ones they're going to be — until the movies start at 11.05am — disappointed. This is serious. This is discussion television. The evening kicks off with A Leaf Through The Century, an amiable tour through the recent history of and different meanings surrounding marijuana use. So there's lots of good jazz on the soundtrack and montage photographs of black people and cheerful sneerings at the arrogantly naive attitudes of the 1960s. Then, after a brief interjection from Laurie Pike reporting on the hip fashion things that can be done with hemp, there's the documentary A Rock And A Hard Place (8.35pm). It's a comparative study on cannabis policing in Leeds and Stockholm. They are very severe on the stuff in Sweden. None of this soft-drug-maybe-we-should-legalise-it business. They just send the forces in and everyone goes to jail. Meanwhile, in more liberal Leeds, there's one marvellous exchange between a young woman holding a baby and a slightly irate policeman who has just broken the door down to her family house in the hope of finding a drugs cache. She keeps asking him why he broke the door. Finally he gets bored with evading the issue and answers: "At the end of the day we've put your door through and there's nothing you can do about it."

* Should cannabis be legalised? Should television have theme nights?

AS TIME GOES BY
Tomorrow, Sunday, BBC1, 7pm

GEOFFREY Palmer is better at suburban craziness (Reginald Perrin, Fairly Secret Army) than he is at suburban benevolence (Butterflies, As Time Goes By). But, rather like Edward Fox, Palmer is an under-celebrated national hero who should be lauded in whatever he cares to do. As Time Goes By is light comedy, very light comedy. *Palmer and Judi Dench are reunit*ed lovers on the verge of marrying a generation later or so than they intended. He is a writer. She has a daughter. He is about to get a pretty secretary. Ha ha ha. Nonetheless, Dench does her best (even if her voice is a little bit too much the perfect actorly instrument) and Palmer justifies the BBC licence fee merely by looking worried and talking briskly.

 Geoffrey Palmer graces mediocre sit-com.

CUTTING EDGE: Amnesia
Monday, Channel 4, 9pm

JOHN Spencer suffered a cerebral haemorrhage and lost most of his adult memories. He will tell people he's just met all about his childhood sailing holidays on the Norfok Broads. Detailed stuff, intricate, with expert tips about the angles of sails that the intervening years have done nothing to erase. And then he will tell them all about it again because John Spencer has a short-term memory of about half a minute. Stewart Norriss was 17 when he banged his head on a kitchen cupboard and, even though there was no physical damage, his entire memory became inaccessible. He had to relearn everything. Sesame Street helped teach him how to get dressed. Visits to the waxworks museum helped as well, as his mother would point out figures and ask him if he remembered who they were supposed to be (although, amnesia or no amnesia, it's not a test that anyone would feel confident passing).

* The lives of three men without memory.

WITHOUT WALLS: J'Accuse The Vegetarians
Tuesday, Channel 4, 9.30pm

JONATHAN Meades, The Times restaurant critic, does a good job demolishing the illogicalities of vegetarians and has a good time doing it. Spraying abuse like gunfire ("bearded buffoons", "turnip tubes"), he attacks the hypocritical pointlessness of using vegetables to mimic meat and the puritanical arrogance of vegetarians. He might though have picked his opponents less carefully. Tony Blackburn and Lynsey De Paul are hardly intellectual heavyweights, while the writer G.F. Newman is so hideously over the moral top (he equates the Nazi Holocaust with carnivores' butchery) as to discount the veggies' case all by himself.

* Jonathan Meades beats up vegetarianism.

MODERN TIMES: Harley Street
Wednesday, BBC2, 8.30pm

THIS documentary starts off as a serious study of the anatomy of Harley Street. Here's a woman about to have a face-lift; here's how much it will cost her (£4,500); here's one of the 14,000 practitioners in the area about to make some tidy money doing the lifting. But then we meet Bonnie and she takes over the show. Bonnie has breast cancer and this time around she's going for the not entirely proven treatment of high-dosage chemotherapy. Bonnie's treatment and her responses to it are fascinating. Her will and her stoicism are marvellous. The film has nowhere to go after that.

 Medical practices in the private sphere.

Playing the propaganda game

Mountbatten was said to doctor reports to proclaim his achievements and hide his mistakes. A new film claims to have uncovered the truth. Robi Dutta reports

Mountbatten (left) pays a visit to British prisoners of war recently freed from Japanese camps

Hindsight deals harsh blows to the reputations of the great and good. But it often reserves its fatal blows for those who go out of their way to persuade historians to endorse their view of events.

During his lifetime, Lord Louis Mountbatten worked harder than most to ensure his place in history, doctoring reports of events in his favour and proclaiming his own achievements. His entry in Who's Who covered a page, listing 14 of his titles.

Mountbatten was acutely aware of the cruelty of revisionism. In an interview with The Times in 1969, he said: "I am glad to tell you that I think I was right from the point of view of history ... In another 20 years people won't be able to understand the point of view of those who criticised me."

Is it due to this industriousness that his reputation lives on among the public and in most of the 50 or so books about his life?

But time has not always been as understanding as the last Viceroy of India might have hoped. Secret Lives: Mountbatten suggests that he deserves a place in the halls of histrionics rather than history. The programme appears to draw on Eminent Churchillians, the controversial book by Andrew Roberts, for its claims about Mountbatten's public life but the producer, Tim Shawcross, says that he started with no preconceptions about Mountbatten, about whom he knew little, and that the programme was commissioned before publication of Roberts's book.

For reflections on Mountbatten's private life, Secret Lives employs interviews with his daughters and film of the Mountbattens. Mountbatten and his wife, Edwina, spent their honeymoon in Hollywood. Here, Mountbatten began to learn about the power of the camera and the art of public relations. On their honeymoon, they made a silent film, shown in Secret Lives, directed by and starring Charlie Chaplin with Mountbatten saving his new wife from a gang of burglars.

The programme says that Mountbatten's public relations skills were realised in one of the great propaganda films of all time, In Which We Serve. Mountbatten convinced a sceptical government that the film, directed by and starring Noel Coward, should be made and in a way which, according to some historians, covered up his grave errors and portrayed him as a hero.

His daughters, Lady Patricia Brabourne and Lady Pamela Hicks, were taken many times to see the film. They provide an intimate insight into their parents' adulterous affairs in candid and rare interviews. The programme offers as an example of Edwina's "uninhibited lifestyle" a home movie which shows her cavorting in snow with un-named men. Lady Pamela believes that her mother turned to "boyfriends" when she realised that her husband was not going to spend his entire day paying court to her and that she had a "terrible rival" in the Navy.

Secret Lives: Mountbatten, Thursday, Channel 4, 9pm

Edwina was also rumoured to have had an affair with Nehru, India's first prime minister, although Lady Pamela says this was not a physical relationship. "I think when my father first found out my mother thought she was in love with someone else, it broke his heart because he was that kind of person," Lady Pamela says. "But he was also the kind of person who... picks up the pieces and gets on with his work."

The programme, led by Andrew Roberts, claims Mountbatten was promoted to positions that he lacked the ability to fill, first in the Navy, next in Command Operations, then in South-East Asia Command and finally as the last Viceroy in India.

Echoing the thrust of Roberts's book, Secret Lives says that this had a series of grave consequences; for instance, Roberts says in the programme, the raid on Dieppe in August 1942 which Mountbatten planned was an "unmitigated disaster" as more than 3,300 Canadians were killed, injured or captured.

In India, Mountbatten hurried up the process of partition and British withdrawal which Secret Lives says may have led to up to a million deaths in the communal massacres — ten times what was claimed by Mountbatten at the time.

Christopher Beaumont, who served on the Radcliffe Commission which drew up the boundaries of the new countries, repeats in Secret Lives his assertion that under Nehru's influence Mountbatten put pressure on Sir Cyril Radcliffe to alter the frontiers in India's favour; this leads even Philip Ziegler, Mountbatten's official biographer, to say in the programme that, if correct, Mountbatten would be "guilty of an appalling indiscretion".

Shawcross denies that this is a negative portrayal of Mountbatten, but the viewer might wonder what of Mountbatten's reputation can be salvaged from this. "He was a loving father and a very impressive leader of men," Roberts says. "He just led them in the wrong places."

It is left to Ziegler to defend Mountbatten. He says, echoing his 1985 biography, "He made bad mistakes ... but I do not see how you can view Mountbatten's career as a whole and deny him the right to be called great."

ARTS

RICHARD MORRISON

A GOOD week for classical music of many different varieties. The Sainsbury's Choir of the Year competition, which has brought the choristers of Britain into lusty competition on Sunday afternoons, reaches its climax tomorrow (BBC2, 4.20pm) with the grand final, involving three adult and three junior choirs. The standard is uniformly high, the frocks simply astonishing.

Tuesday night's Omnibus (BBC1, 10.20pm) is about the virtuoso violinist Joshua Bell. When Decca started promoting this clean-cut, all-American kid with lots of gorgeous, soft-focus pictures, I took an instant dislike to Master Bell. Then I heard him in concert and had to admit that he could play a bit. Since then, the record companies have found far less deserving teeny-playthings to promote in the classical field, while Bell's own musicality has matured gloriously. All in all, a deserving subject for profile.

Joshua Bell in profile (Omnibus, BBC1, 10.20pm)

Meanwhile, the Purcell celebrations continue tomorrow, Sunday, with the live televising of a concert from Westminster Abbey. Titled Music for Queen Mary (BBC2, 7.40pm), it includes the music that Purcell wrote for William and Mary's coronation in 1689, as well as for the Queen's funeral in the Abbey, exactly 300 years ago. Poignantly, the same music was heard in the Abbey just a few months later, for Purcell's own funeral.

Finally, note an interesting South Bank Show tomorrow, Sunday (ITV, 11pm), devoted to the American playwright Edward Albee. Best known for his 1960s play Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, he recently came back into the reckoning with Three Tall Women, which last year won Maggie Smith an award as best actress.

ONCE, admitting a passion for cars was a bit like owning up to train-spotting. Today, television schedules are packed with car programmes, though anoraks and dirty finger nails don't feature prominently. Auto Erotic (Channel 4, Tuesday, 9pm, see feature in Car 95, page 9) a new three-parter, takes the sports car as this week's subject. Is it masculine or feminine? Can a car's rear end be seductive? Men with big moustaches and booming voices never asked questions like these, but if they interest you, tune in to find out the answers.

Less glamorous these days is Amstrad, the company that put personal computers into millions of homes, then ran out of puff. The Money Programme (BBC2, tomorrow, Sunday, 7pm) talks to Amstrad founder Alan Sugar, who has a plan for reviving the company.

Alan Sugar makes plans (BBC2, Sunday, 7pm)

Encounters (Channel 4, tomorrow, Sunday, 7pm) has accompanied entrepreneur George Tulloch to the bottom of the Atlantic, in search of treasures from the Titanic. The film promises the best pictures yet of the unsinkable liner, though some may think the project smacks of grave-robbing.

Pick of the rest looks like being Cutting Edge's examination of amnesia (Channel 4, Monday, 9pm). I suppose I should mention Magic Animals, yet another film on dolphins (BBC2, Wednesday, 8pm), but even dolphins are beginning to complain that the species is over-exposed.

SPRING must have come early to Albert Square, where first Kaff and now Michelle are behaving quite out of character for Walford women. In last week's EastEnders (BBC1, Mon 8pm, Tues and Thurs 7.30pm; omnibus Sun 1.30pm) Ms Beale stunned us by trowelling on some slap, brushing her hair and getting spliced in the time it would have taken her to whip up a fried egg sandwich. This week 'Shell is contemplating life north of the Vic when Geoff finally gets a word in edgeways. Whatever next? Pat is going all soft on Roy, Bianca's heart is broken, in short what used to be a den of tigresses is rapidly dissolving into a hutch of fluffy bunnies. We'll have to depend on Cindy, revitalised after a few weeks in Lanzarote, to act in suitably harridan-like fashion and judging by last week's brushes with David Wicks, she looks set not to disappoint.

Martin Platt contemplates confession in the Street

In Coronation Street (ITV, Mon, Wed and Fri at 7.30pm; repeats 12.55pm, Mon, Wed, Fri) we must first go through the Alf Roberts and Martin Platt stand-off before we get to the real treat of the week. Alf, husband of Audrey, saw Martin, husband of Audrey's daughter, delivering a Christmas kiss to a fellow nurse (female), and not just in the spirit of festive camaraderie. Now Martin must add an air of pain to his habitual open-mouthed puzzlement as he contemplates confession. There's a bit more stuff about Mike (motor trouble) and Alma (surprise in post) and Steve (shock in post) but roll on Friday. Our hero is Reg, the subject is his quest for a youthful, thrusting appearance and the star of the show is a toupee, on Reg's bonce, in the Rovers.

Grave concerns

REPEATS

JOE JOSEPH

IT IS going to be jolly hard to believe our ears when the news does finally come through — many years from now — that Sir Jimmy Savile really has popped his clogs. His obituary seems to cross our path almost monthly.

Savile was very upset at Christmas when Chris Morris, presenting a show on Radio One, ran a spoof obituary claiming that the blond television and radio star had collapsed and died. Savile sued the BBC for "substantial damages" after his telephone was clogged with calls from the media and members of the public.

He said the joke — which Morris had played a few weeks earlier on Michael Heseltine — had ruined his Christmas, and Savile's lawyers told the BBC the report had been "deplorable and irresponsible".

Jimmy Savile gives his obituary (C4, Tuesday)

All this hullabaloo must only have confused further those who thought the Jim'll Fix It presenter was already dead after seeing him on The Obituary Show in Channel 4's Without Walls series.

Now it is being repeated (Channel 4, Tuesday, midnight), and Savile dies for us once again. By a curious coincidence, it is on The Obituary Show that Savile explains his love of libel actions. Morris should have watched.

Later on Tuesday night comes Blood, Sweat And Glory (Channel 4, 1.35am). This is a history of martial arts that covers everything from karate in Japan, through swordplay in medieval warfare to Olympic fencing. It also finds time to look at the way boxing has developed (if that is the right word) from the ancient Greeks to Mohammad Ali. (Answer: their poetry was better.)

In the old days Savile and Morris might have settled their dispute with a bout of fencing. Nowadays, lawyers do the carving up, always making sure that they get the biggest slice.

In Dawn French's Murder Most Horrid II: A Severe Case Of Death (BBC2, Tuesday, 9pm), Maud Jenkins, a housekeeper whose interest in the medical profession is not matched by any professional skill, struggles to become a doctor in male-dominated 19th-century England.

To do this she must assume the identity of a deceased male medic. The plot develops complications when the dead doctor's long lost son turns up.

Brian of Britain

SPORT

LOUISE TAYLOR

PUT Brian Clough, Ray Illingworth and John Sadler together in a television studio, ask them to talk about sport and the discussion should certainly be forthright. This is what ITV has done in Sport In Question (Carlton, Monday, 10.40pm, check regions). The former Nottingham Forest manager, the present chairman of England cricket selectors and the journalist who writes a column in The Sun under the banner "The man who gives it to you straight", seem sure to provide a lively mix. Ian St John and Jimmy Greaves chair the debate but many viewers will be concerned to see how Clough looks and behaves after he recently let the insults fly at a London sporting lunch.

Talking of letting fly — in the aftermath of last week's televised boxing tragedy, most people will have mixed feelings about tuning in to ITV's Big Fight Live (tomorrow, Saturday, 10pm, check regions). Jim Rosenthal introduces live coverage from the Livingstone Forum, Scotland, as Britain's most precocious boxing talent, Sheffield's Naseem Hamed, takes on the Argentinian Sergio Liendo for the WBC international bantamweight title. How many viewers will feel uneasy about cheering Hamed to victory in a sport some say should be banned?

At the opposite end of the spectrum, cynics argue that figure skating is not really a "proper" sport. Make up your own mind by watching the World Figure Skating Championships from Birmingham's National Exhibition Centre (BBC2, evenings from Tuesday, see daily listings and also Sportsnight, BBC1, Wednesday, 10.20pm). Sue Barker and Robin Cousins present, with Barry Davies and Alan Weeks commentating. British ice dance champions Michelle Fitzgerald and Vincent Kyle will have a tough time emulating Torvill and Dean.

Barry Davies is to be found wearing his football hat today, Saturday, commentating on a match for Match of the Day (BBC1, 10.30pm). Earlier in the day, Grandstand includes live coverage of the Five Nations rugby union championship match, Scotland v Wales (BBC1, today, Saturday, 2.10pm), from Murrayfield, Edinburgh, with commentary by Bill McLaren.

PICK OF THE WEEK

Women get their day

Lesley Joseph chairs Nothing Like A Dame (Radio 2, Wed, 7.03pm) as part of International Women's Day

Are women properly served by radio? Judging by my own postbag and the necessarily more extensive one at Radio 4's Feedback, my impression is that women are more inclined than men to complain about radio programming.

The fact that a woman, Liz Forgan, runs the BBC networks probably makes women all the more sharp of ear for any sign that what Ms Forgan wants is presumed to be what women in general want. Certainly most of the women writing to the BBC were perplexed at the switch of Woman's Hour from afternoon to morning, a move not assisted by recent ITV research which showed that most women find the hour between 2pm and 3pm the one time when they are most likely to be able to relax with a good radio programme. Woman's Hour, of course, used to be transmitted at that time.

Whether women want or need their own slot in the calendar is a different moot point, but International Women's Day is now so entrenched as to be immoveable. This year it will be happening, in broadcast terms, on Radio 2 on Wednesday, with brief segments throughout the day in which various celebs — including Rolf Harris, John Humphrys, Glenda Jackson and Linford Christie — talk about the influence women have had on their lives.

The main events are an Afternoon Concert (Radio 2, Wednesday, 2pm) and Nothing Like A Dame (Radio 2, Wednesday, 7.03pm), the latter described as "a musical quiz for and about women". Beverley Craven tops the bill in the concert, which is introduced by Fiona Armstrong in the slot normally occupied by Gloria Hunniford.

The evening quiz is a curiosity, in that it is chaired by Lesley Joseph from Birds of a Feather. I happen to think Ms Joseph is a good actress and a spirited personality, but her television persona as the sex-and-money obsessed clothes-horse would hardly strike the average man as an archetype modern woman straight out of early Germaine Greer.

Perhaps this is Radio 2's little joke. Or perhaps men are still failing to understand the more prosaic achievements that women want as a manifestation of feminist philosophy. Search me.

I still think that a woman's (radio) place is listening to Woman's Hour (Radio 4, weekdays, 10.30am), an excellent programme for people of every gender which has an especially interesting interview on Thursday when Dame Diana Rigg discusses whether Britain still needs arts patronage.

The other much-vaunted programme on Radio 2 in the coming week is the start of a new series, Marc Blake's Whining for England (Thursday, 7.03pm). I recommend it without praising it, for on the evidence of the first show this is a good idea let down by the writing, but a sense of humour is a rich and varied thing so you may fall about in time with the studio audience. I fell asleep.

My problem with the concept here is that most of our whines are so familiar (the weather, British Rail) that it takes real originality to sustain this kind of programme. Still, mustn't grumble.

There is more promising comedy this week in the shape of Paradise Lost In Space (Radio 4, Thursday, 6.30pm), a new series with good credentials. The stars are Tony Robinson, Louise Lombard, David Haigh and Michael Troughton, and the writer is Colin Swash, who produced the excellent Ian Hislop series Gush for Radio 4 and who is the producer of Have I Got News For You.

The story concerns the crash-landing of humans on a planet called Oblivio, where the Oblivions have been living in bliss until the earthfolk decide the locals can be taught a thing or two. The incomers send Oblivio to oblivion, as if you hadn't guessed.

Radio 3's Fairest Isle series, the celebration of British music lasting all year, has a landmark concert this week in Queen Mary's Funeral (tomorrow, Sunday, 7.40pm). You can tell it is a landmark because the programme is introduced by Nicholas Kenyon, the controller of Radio 3, and if a BBC controller is in charge it must be a landmark.

This one has a fair claim, though, for it comes 300 years to the day after Queen Mary was buried and features music associated with her life. The funeral music has special interest because Henry Purcell was organist at Westminster Abbey at the time.

The dismal state of British sport is meat and drink to the best, if not the only, analytical series on radio, which is On The Line (tomorrow, Sunday, Radio 5 Live, 1.35pm). Tomorrow the subject is English cricket but happily this does not mean another spell from the tedious Fred Truman explaining what's wrong with Devon Malcolm's delivery stride.

On The Line explores the real problem, which is the condition of the game at the grass roots, including the astonishing state of the London Cricket Academy. That has been in existence for 11 years and has produced 16 county players. Yet the cricket powers-that-be have, in all that time, given it just £1,000. It's enough to make one whine for England.

Dolly mixture is still a winning formula

The woman villain we all seem to love is back. Hilary Kingsley on how a fan's letter inspired a second sequel to Widows

Dolly Rawlins (Ann Mitchell), having served her sentence, now plans to recover the diamonds she stole, in She's Out

If Wormwood Scrubs was evacuated and designated the prison to which villains from television dramas are sent, there would probably be severe overcrowding again. Men who have committed small-screen crimes are too numerous to list.

There is, though, only one Dolly Rawlins, wronged woman turned thief and killer, deserving in many ways, not the least of a loyal viewers' fan club. She became a widow — or so she thought — and eventually the mastermind of an armed robbery in 1983.

That was the plot of Widows, Thames Television's risk-taking thriller about three women who inherited their late husbands' "licence" to steal and hired other women to help them do it. The risks were that Dolly was no glamourpuss, that all the women were played by largely unknown actresses and that the moral of the story was that crime could pay.

With around 13 million viewers and several critics' awards, Widows seemed to be the start of Lynda La Plante's screenwriting success (after years of rejections) and a confirmation that Verity Lambert (Dr Who, The Newcomers, Budgie, Minder), one of the few female executives in ITV, was destined for industry stardom.

That a busy screen future awaited the stage actress Ann Mitchell after her portrayal of deceived Dolly (her husband turned out to be alive and living with a younger woman) looked certain too.

No such luck. La Plante was to write a Widows sequel in 1985, in which the women headed for luxury and obscurity in Rio, but then to languish in her own obscurity until Prime Suspect in 1991 proved her true grit.

Lambert became the head of production at EMI, launching multi-million pound movies but "hated it" and, thwarted by the committee-style decision-making, left a few years later to go independent with a small team.

Worst of all, while Dolly dwindled in jail, mainstream television continued to hire women with wrinkles only for comedy, soap operas or supporting roles. So Mitchell returned to the theatre and to teaching drama at The Guildhall and to the widows' real counterparts at Holloway Prison.

She's Out, ITV, Monday, 9pm

The fan club hadn't forgotten her, though. Last year one of them wrote to La Plante to remind her that Dolly would have served enough of the ten year sentence for murder (of her husband) begun in January 1986 (with time off for good behaviour) to be freed this spring.

"Lynda rang me and asked what I thought," says Lambert, whose Cinema Verity company had meanwhile produced Comics, written by La Plante, and Alan Bleasdale's GBH for Channel 4, along with several sit-coms and the ill-fated Eldorado for the BBC.

"I knew viewers liked Dolly, not so much for her criminality as for her vulnerability, so I thought Dolly's Out or She's Out, as it became, was a wonderful idea."

La Plante, who'd set up her own production company and was then juggling umpteen projects including The Governor, a series about the woman governor of a men's prison (to star Janet McTeer later this year on Carlton), initially thought she might manage a two or three-part Dolly story.

"I knew she would find the material for a six-part serial once she began her research," Lambert says, "so I took the idea to Carlton and the Network Centre ummed and aahed a bit and then said 'yes'."

The result is, maybe, not the most likely contemporary tale of need, greed and grudging camaraderie among a new gang of seven women on the outside of the law, holed up in a derelict health farm. But as the police, and the mother of one of the widows killed in the last heist, conspire to stop Dolly recovering stolen diamonds and her dream of opening a children's home collapses, the pace quickens.

Bestriding it all is Ann Mitchell, who delivers Dolly's parting words to a warder and governor in a way that will cause cheers in every women's prison in the land.

The women end up plotting to rob a train. "Television is still terribly male-orientated," Lambert says. "But if you put women in non-traditional but three-dimensional roles and make the story exciting, men as well as women will watch. Even if the men don't admit it."

Tony Patrick samples a mouth-watering new series from Madhur Jaffrey

In the best possible taste

Exploding onto the screen with bright, bold colours and exotic music, Flavours of India is a journey through the cooking and culture of six distinct regions of the sub-continent: the Punjab, Kerala, Gujarat, Tamil Nadu, Bengal and Goa. The presenter, Madhur Jaffrey, whose expertise and pre-eminence in Asian cuisine are beyond dispute, seems particularly animated in these half-hour programmes.

She crams in recipes tighter than passengers on a Calcutta bus, meanwhile sketching in the character of each region and its people. She also offers a brief guide to local attractions, which should be compulsory viewing for the flippant likes of Magenta De Vine, of the all-too-Rough Guides series.

Jaffrey is elegance and unflustered grace throughout; the contrast between her own calm confidence and the often chaotic cacophony of urban India is especially impressive. Whether in the spice market of Port Cochin, Kerala, or the communal kitchens of the Sikh temples of Amritsar, where 3,000 free meals are prepared, she glides smilingly through, never missing a beat as she dispenses information to the camera.

And the food is as dazzling as it is strongly flavoured: mustard oil or ghee, in gleaming copper and steel pans, seethes with sweet peppers, shallots, green and red chillies, garlic by the handful, fresh herbs and coconut. If you watch the programmes after dinner, be prepared to find yourself hungry again, and tempted to slip back to the kitchen for a swift stir-fry.

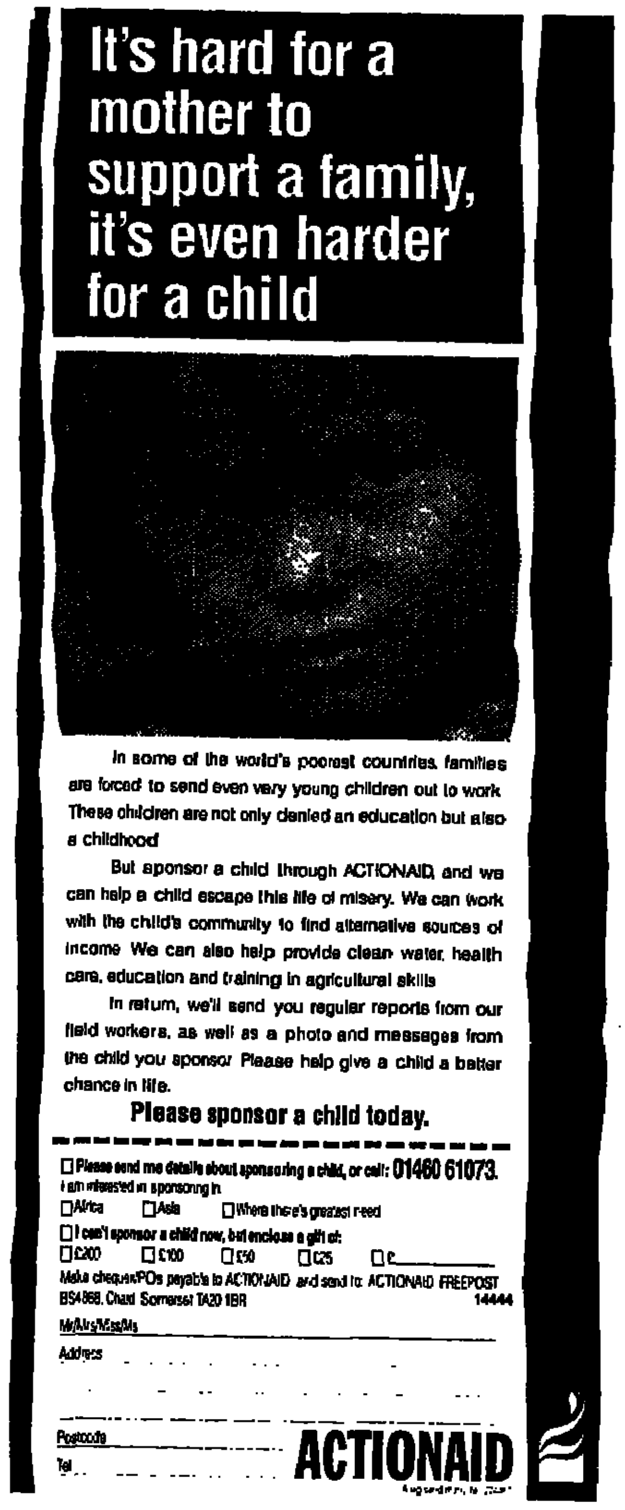
Madhur Jaffrey's Flavours of India
BBC2, Tuesday, 8.30pm

While Jaffrey's demonstrations of how to prepare various dishes are models of clarity, they are necessarily taken at a fast clip, so you will either have to record and watch again, with one finger on the pause button, or invest in the book of the series, which was published in mid-February (BBC Books; £17.99 hardback, £12.99 paperback).

The non-culinary images on screen are frequently most beautiful, whether of natural splendours or elaborately carved towers and temples, simple village houses or marbled palace halls. Jaffrey involves the locals in her quest; they include Sonali Basu, an actress and singer, who cooks potatoes with tomatoes and deep-fried bread stuffed with green peas for a typical Calcutta breakfast; and in Gujarat she meets Anand Sarabhai, a Jain inventor and biologist, who has created pasta made from split peas and yoghurt.

By no means all the cooking is in the same style. In Tamil Nadu, rice is all-important, and steaming rather than frying is the method of choice. In Gujarat, vegetarianism is the norm. Goa's dishes reflect the influence of the Portuguese, who ruled it for centuries.

There, and in Kerala (where the series begins), they have innumerable recipes using sea and freshwater fish, while the Punjab, with its tandoor ovens, and West Bengal, with its Anglo-Indian legacy, cater handsomely for anyone who is a meat-eater.



It's hard for a mother to support a family, it's even harder for a child

In some of the world's poorest countries families are forced to send even very young children out to work. These children are not only denied an education but also a childhood

But sponsor a child through ACTIONAID and we can help a child escape this life of misery. We can work with the child's community to find alternative sources of income. We can also help provide clean water, health care, education and training in agricultural skills

In return, we'll send you regular reports from our field workers, as well as a photo and messages from the child you sponsor. Please help give a child a better chance in life.

OFF THE BOX

Peak viewing success

WHILE the BBC seems to have lost the knack of popular drama — its newest, Crown Prosecutor, attracted only around six million viewers with its first show — Carlton's Peak Practice is peaking almost too successfully. With the first four episodes each attracting around 15 million viewers and taking a 56 per cent share of the audience, detailed plans to switch to half-hours next year have been scrapped in case the spell is broken. But a problem remains with Amanda Burton and Kevin Whateley, who play the series' leads, husband and wife doctors. Both have declined to sign new contracts following reports of an off-screen friendship which are said to have embarrassed them. Whateley, shortly to film an Inspector Morse as Sergeant Lewis, wants to be free for other projects. "We are hoping to change Amanda Burton's mind," says a spokesman.

■ WINSTON Churchill's infirmity in his later years was skilfully concealed by his family. This and other claims will be debated in The Churchills, a three-part series screening in May on ITV made by Phillip Whitehead and the team which produced The Kennedys and The Windsors.

Tyre less

STEVE Coogan had let it be known that Alan Partridge was in mothballs and nothing must distract him from the task of writing a new comedy series with Alexei Sayle's collaborators, Graham Linehani and Arthur Mathews. But at the last minute the Porsche-driving comedian succumbed to the temptation of narrating Auto Erotic, Channel 4's three-part celebration of the art of car design beginning on Tuesday (see Car 95, page 9). Happily, Lineham and Mathews report that Six Sides of Steve Coogan is still on the road for later this year.

■ ZSA ZSA Gabor so enjoys appearing on televison with Ruby Wax, even if she's at the receiving end of Wax wit, that she appears in the comedienne's current advertisement for Ford (being snubbed) for no fee. It seems the veteran glamour girl warmed to Wax when she demanded to know if Zsa Zsa had had as many face-lifts as husbands. "I've had none. See, darlink!" declared Gabor, flinging her head and hair forward for Wax to inspect a scar-free neck. "I agreed with her. Why do you think she's my friend now?" Wax says.

No gain without growing pains

Two more American series about adolescent angst are poised to hit British shores. Victoria McKee reports

Adolescent angst is an increasingly popular American import — as if we didn't have enough of our own. Beverly Hills 90210, Saved By The Bell, California Dreams and Boy Meets World (among others) are being joined from tomorrow, Sunday, by Party of Five on Channel 4.

Party of Five and My So-Called Life, another series about teenagers which Channel 4 has also bought and intends to show later in the year, have both been recognised only as "niche market" television in America. On the rival networks NBC and ABC, they have attracted audiences of around ten million — substantial here, but insignificant in America. This lack of interest, according to the woman dubbed America's leading media guru, Betsy Frank of Saatchi & Saatchi New York, is because American teenagers are too busy experiencing adolescent angst to spend prime-time hours slumped in front of the television. And because, when they do, "They don't necessarily want to see things about people like themselves — they'd rather aspire upwards".

My So-Called Life, by the Bedford Falls Company that produced thirtysomething, was the subject of an emotional e-mail campaign by high school students after it was dropped by ABC and its producers and cast are currently waiting nervously to find out whether there will be a second series. "Enormous critical success is often the only thing worse than abject failure," its executive producer, Ed Zwick, says. It is a warm but not cosy thirtysomething-style treatment of adolescence, sharpened by a stunning central performance by Clare Danes, the 15-year-old who plays Beth in the new film of Little Women, which opens here soon.

Its writer, Winnie Holtzman, deplores "candy-coated television programmes about teenagers". My So-Called Life has the "through the keyhole" feeling of having opened a teenager's diary, and in that sense is reminiscent of British series such as The Secret Diary of Adrian Mole or Diary of a Teenage Health Freak.

Party of Five manages to be both less artful and less realistic. It is a wildly improbable story of five orphans (ranging in age from 24 months to 24 years) who attempt to raise themselves after Mom and Dad have died in a car crash, learning predictable lessons about life along the way.

Party of Five, tomorrow, Sunday, Channel 4, 6pm

We meet up with them six months after the accident — surprisingly emotionally well-adjusted but not doing so well in managing the money doled out to them quarterly from a mysterious trust fund controlled by distant and apparently uncaring hands.

Chris Keyser, the executive producer and co-creator and writer of the series for Columbia Tristar, says: "It's relevant to all families because so many kids are raising themselves alone anyway today, with two parents working."

So why has his show attracted such a puny audience in America? Keyser says: "A show like this or My So-Called Life places a lot of demands on an audience — you're forced to care about the people, and audiences used to letting things wash over them don't like that. You can watch 90210 from a distance. These are tougher to sit through."

It didn't seem too tough an emotional investment to me — although USA has called it "a sweet and emotionally compelling drama" and The New York Post "an extraordinary, impressive show". Plot lines about hiring a sexy new nanny for the baby, and tracking down a missing grandfather are weak. Will British teenagers tune in? My 13-year-old son, who has seen a couple of episodes, doesn't think so but the programme might be carried — as it has been for 22 episodes so far in America — by the interesting new faces of Matthew Fox (as 24-year-old Charlie, the leader of the family), Scott Wolf (as 16-year-old Bailey) and Neve Campbell (as 15-year-old Julia).

Keyser dismisses My So-Called Life by saying: "That's about kids who worry about everything. This is about kids who have a lot to worry about but get through it. We are much more upbeat."

Brigid Callaghan reports on a film that investigates the explosion in holidays afloat

Can the cruising market stay buoyant?

Is cruising a working class holiday — or the holiday of the future? According to some, bigger ships and lower prices are turning the once elegant and exclusive pursuit into a package holiday on the ocean wave. But David Crossland, the chairman of Airtours plc, which recently bought two second-hand ships and offers Mediterranean cruises at £449, says that even to ask the question about class is "terribly snobbish".

High Interest's examination of the business of cruising, Gamble On The Ocean Wave, concentrates on P&O's new cruising flagship, the £200 million, 1,975 passenger Oriana. P&O is the market leader in cruising for UK passengers, a market which has tripled in the last six years but is still small in comparison to America. Has P&O made a wise investment or did it fail to anticipate the effects of recession and fierce competition? It must attract new business without alienating existing customers; it says that the new ship's extensive facilities for children are a reflection of established needs, not an attempt to woo the family market.

The chairman of Saga Holidays, which caters for the over 50s, says families and older people do not mix well on board. He thinks the market is over-crowded and warns customers to take care in choosing a ship. He is irritated by some ships' quest for youthful passengers. A few years ago, Saga was asked by P&O not to sell its holidays but it was asked back and has sold berths on the Oriana.

On board the Oriana's sister ship, the Canberra, some are thrilled to have places on the new ship's now fully-booked maiden voyage in April, but there are questions about why a British ship has been built in Germany, at the Meyer Werft yard in Papenburg.

P&O says that some British yards did not tender and others could not undertake to meet the price or the deadline. The Meyer yard is 30 miles from the sea on the River Ems. The river was dredged to allow the ship's passage to the sea and environmentalists and fishermen protested. Five thousand local people, in an area where Meyer employs 1,800, demonstrated in favour of the dredging. Eventually, High Interest reports, Meyer paid the fishermen £1.5 million and the regional government spent £8 million on environmental projects.

The programme says that only 20 per cent of Oriana's £200 million cost was spent in Britain (carpet, stabilisers, china, library furniture by David Linley). The steel is from Poland, lifeboats from Holland, bathrooms from France, propellers — employing melted down Deutschmarks from the former East Germany — from Denmark.

Douglas Ward of the Maritime Evaluations Group blesses the Oriana and all who sail in her. He says he would have ordered two. The growth in the cruise market will be, he says, "spectacular".

Connolly brings smiles to a devasted land

When Billy Connolly visited Mozambique in 1989 on behalf of Comic Relief, his small daughter misheard and called the country Nose and Beak. She is obviously a comedian in the making. Meanwhile dad is back in Africa for Billy Connolly's Return to Nose and Beak (BBC1, 9.30pm), updating his previous report. The good news is that the 16-year civil war has ended. The bad news is that land mines are still blowing the legs off small children unlucky enough to tread in the wrong place. Connolly visits some of the victims as well as watching the emotional reunion of a widowed father and the children he has not seen for five years. Sympathetic without being patronising, Connolly is an ideal person to explain the Third World's troubles to the First.

Rossini's The Barber of Seville is the latest opera to get the animated treatment, courtesy of the inventive Russian company, Christmas Films, in Operavox (BBC2, 7.30pm). Tiny wooden puppets, with hand-carved faces, are at the centre of the production which hardly stops for breath as it works hectically through the plot, or as much of it as can be crammed into half an hour. The novelty, and the source of many visual jokes, is showing the scenery being slotted into place and stage hands dashing in and out to arrange the props.

Admirers of Dr Finlay (ITV, 9pm) probably wish that now and again, just for a change, there would be a leavening of its sombre plot lines. Admittedly, the show can do nothing about the weather, which seems unrelievedly grey, but the odd joke or two would be welcome. Unfortunately, however, this is the last episode of the current series and there is not a laugh in sight. Tannochbrae is thrown into turmoil after Dr Napier (Jessica Turner) fails to diagnose a case of diphtheria, an old friend of Cameron (Ian Bannen) is dying of cancer and Finlay (David Rintoul) is called to a horrible car crash.

La Landriana, south-west of Rome, is the destination for the cheery Yorkshire horticulturalist, Alan Mason, and wine expert-cum-tree buff, Hugh Johnson, in Gardens Without Borders (Channel 4, 8pm). The garden lies on the Pontine Marshes and was started, surprisingly, only in the early 1960s. The plan was drawn up by an Englishman, Russell Page, making it an ideal subject for a series about the interchange between English and Italian design.

FRIDAY MARCH 10

It's only a game after all

THERE is no doubt that football is in a sorry state, and the catalogue of problems grows ever longer: the riot in Dublin, the deportation of Chelsea fans from Belgium, the FA inquiries into alleged bribes and alleged financial "bungs", and of course the Eric Cantona affair.

It all seemed so much simpler when you were young, playing for a school team and hoping to get into the national side. And from those teams have emerged some of the best players in Britain, such as Liverpool's Robbie Fowler (right). Sky Sports is giving you the chance to spot the stars of the future with its coverage of the Victory Shield, a tournament between schoolboys of the home nations. Tonight (7pm) sees Scotland play hosts to Northern Ireland. Just a pity that the rise in mixed and schoolgirl football doesn't get the same coverage.

Benjamin Braddock (Dustin Hoffman) starts an affair with Mrs Robinson (Anne Bancroft) to the songs of Simon and Garfunkel in Mike Nichols's comedy The Graduate (BBC1, Friday, 10.25pm)

PLATOON
Today, Saturday, BBC2, 10pm
THIS evidently autobiographical recollection of the Vietnam war remains the most substantial achievement to date of Oliver Stone, the director of the current Natural Born Killers. Stone, who had volunteered for service in Vietnam, offers a brutally disillusioned picture of incompetence, atrocity, fratricide, drinking and dope in a war with no defined moral purpose. "We didn't fight the enemy," reflects the young infantryman protagonist (Charlie Sheen), "we fought ourselves, and the enemy was within us." The murderous conflicts between the humane faction of the unit and its mindless redneck killing machines reflects socio-political divisions of peace-time America.
 Oliver Stone's Oscar-winning epic of Vietnam reality.

DILLINGER
Today, Saturday, BBC1, 11.30pm
JOHN DILLINGER is Hollywood's favourite gangster — perhaps because when the FBI shot him down in 1934 he had just come out of the Biograph cinema, Chicago, where they were showing Manhattan Madness, starring Clark Gable. Dillinger was the first film by John Milius, already established as a writer, and evinces his fascination with American legends: apocryphal encounters are concocted between Dillinger (Warren Oates, in his first starring role) and notorious gangland contemporaries such as Baby Face Nelson and Pretty Boy Floyd; and the gangsters are shown basking in their fame as media personalities. Milius reacts against the chic of the then recent Bonnie and Clyde, returning to the fast-moving action style of the B-movies of Dillinger's own day.
* Fast-moving, gun-blazing celebration of crime legend.

FANTASTIC VOYAGE
Tomorrow, Sunday, BBC1, 2.50pm
THIS science fiction fantasy takes a premise of wondrous extravagance — a submarine and its complement of five are shrunk to a size where they may sail through the blood stream of an injured scientist, in order to clear a clot on his brain. The landscapes of the inner man are realised with rich imagination and exemplary special effects, as the journey progresses from the torrents of the jugular vein to the cyclonic zones of the lungs. The expedition is led by Stephen Boyd and a characteristically shifty Donald Pleasence. Unsurprisingly, the film, directed by Richard Fleischer, took Oscars for colour art direction and visual effects.
* Inventive science-fiction odyssey through human blood-stream.

GIANT
Tuesday, Sky Movies Gold, 8pm
JAMES DEAN's last film (he was killed the day after finishing shooting) confirmed his huge and dominating personality as an actor, in a role that requires him to progress from callow, moody cowhand to embittered, middle-aged tycoon. George Stevens and his writers have successfully corralled Edna Ferber's sprawling 1952 saga about the passionate conflict between a snobbish Texan cattle family and their new-rich former employee. The splendour of the vast landscapes emphasises the narrowness of the human emotions. The starry cast of Rock Hudson, Elizabeth Taylor, the former child star Jane Withers, Mercedes McCambridge, Sal Mineo and Carroll Baker, just beginning her career, are uniformly and startlingly excellent under Stevens's direction — even if the make-up and hair departments are pussy-footed in representing their ageing processes as the action moves from the 1920s to the Second World War.
* Outstanding performances distinguish adaptation of Texan epic.

BEYOND THE FOREST
Thursday, Channel 4, 2.15pm
BETTE DAVIS enters wholeheartedly into this unrepentant melodrama about a small-town wife and her fatal efforts to relieve the monotony of a humdrum marriage (to doctor Joseph Cotten) with a clandestine lover (Chicago millionaire David Brian). Deplored in its day as unworthy stuff for its distinguished director, King Vidor, this latterday Madame Bovary can now be enjoyed for its unwavering belief in its own overwrought drama, for the insights with which Vidor sketches the social atmospheres of a Wisconsin mill-town in the 1940s, and above all for the uncompromising virtuosity of Bette Davis, unfazed by the alarming black wig thrust upon her.
 Bette Davis at home in melodrama of small-town life and loves.

THE GRADUATE
Friday, BBC1, 10.25pm
ONE of the greatest and most seminal Hollywood successes of the 1960s, Mike Nichols's second film, after Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, still holds up well today. The Graduate benefits from the ingenious and witty script by Calder Willingham and Buck Henry (from Charles Webb's novel), who give a sharper, darker significance to the Doris Day-style of sex comedy. The film launched the career of 30-year-old Dustin Hoffman, playing the inexperienced new graduate who is seduced by the rapacious wife (Anne Bancroft) of his father's partner, but then falls in love with her daughter (Katharine Ross). A finely crafted comic view of West-coast suburbia, the film is notable for the celebrated Simon and Garfunkel score.
 Sharp-edged farce about Californian sexual mores.

I WALKED WITH A ZOMBIE
Friday, BBC2, 12.15am
In the 1940s the Russian-born novelist and producer Val Lewton masterminded a dozen low-budget horror films that are distinguished by their visual style and eerie poetry. I Walked With a Zombie, directed by Jacques Tourneur from a script by Curt Siodmak and Ardel Wray, is, despite its lurid title, the finest of them. The Jane Eyre story, set in the Caribbean, stars Tom Conway as a rich planter in Haiti whose wife has been rendered catatonic by voodoo spells. Frances Dee plays the young nurse sent out to care for her, whose work is complicated by a growing attraction to her employer. Unlike later, cruder essays in the genre, Lewton evokes terror through atmosphere and suggestion rather than tangible monsters and special effects: the most celebrated sequence is the nocturnal journey of the nurse and her silent patient through the cane fields to reach a voodoo outpost. Sound and silence are used to mesmeric effect: this was probably the first film to make use of Calypso music, with songs by Sir Lancelot.
 Classic horror film outclasses later and more opulent efforts in the style.

MARCH 4

☐ Platoon (1986, BBC2, 10pm, 115 mins). See pick of the week, above.
☐ The Big Chill (1983, Sky Movies Gold, 10pm, 103 mins). Even if not quite digging as deep as it pretends, this is an amusing, perceptive collision between buoyant 1960s idealism and dour 1980s pragmatism. Reunited by the death of a college friend, a group of former radicals analyse themselves and each other, eat, flirt and hark back, sometimes dishonestly, to their long-haired past. The satirical edge gives focus to a top-drawer ensemble cast, among them Kevin Kline, William Hurt and Glenn Close.
☐ Angel Heart (1987, ITV network, 10.45pm, 125 mins). Weighed down by Alan Parker's in-your-face directing at its most blunt, this at least shows Parker to have a searching visual imagination as he translates William Hjörtsberg's Falling Angel. As a private eye (Mickey Rourke) hunts down a missing crooner (who has turned his back on his pact with the Devil), and slips down the slope towards Hell, Rourke — at his grim, obsessive best — is a puppet being yanked in different directions by Robert de Niro.
☐ Cheech and Chong's Up In Smoke (1978, Channel 4, 10.40pm, 100 mins). The two American dopes, both here in search of dope, move from sound to screen with mixed results. The surreal, subversive conversations and comments are the richest vein of humour, but some of the sight gags look considerably less special by comparison. The signposts of an indolent, LA dopehead's world are amusingly written in. Part of Channel 4's Pot Night, which includes the hilarious High School Confidential (1958) and Reefer Madness (1936), both wonderfully absurd warnings on the dangers of dope.
☐ The Creeping Flesh (1972, BBC1, 1.15am, 90 mins). Much more tightly structured than many of its ilk, this superior Gothic horror has Messrs Cushing and Lee play brothers battling over the revival of a Neanderthal man, and over the march of evil through their world. Some intriguing ideas, like the relationship between the rational and the mystical, are touched on amusingly, and Lorna Heilbron, transformed from Cushing's polite daughter to a raging sexual storm, is a comic plus.

SUNDAY

☐ Lifeboat (1944, The Movie Channel, 6.55am, 96 mins). Although Alfred Hitchcock cannot always transcend the strictures of his single cramped set (a mountain he gave himself to climb), he still switches on the suspense with plenty of power, and coaxes a mesmerising star-turn from Tallulah Bankhead, in her one major role. A tale of tension among survivors of a U-boat attack.

☐ Casablanca (1942, BBC2, 2pm, 100 mins). Had T-shirts been around 50 years ago, much of the film's now-legendary dialogue would have started appearing on cotton. Albeit a slice of intense wartime nostalgia, the film is still shot through with electricity because the dialogue has a real tang, likewise the presence of Humphrey Bogart as cynical Rick. All the key elements, dialogue, cast, period atmospherics and music lock firmly into place to create many people's best film of all time.

☐ Orlando (1992, Channel 4, 10pm, 100 mins). Sally Potter's extremely non-British visual succulence goes hand-in-hand with a density of text, which nonetheless comments on English history, sexuality and class in a light, dancing manner. Tilda Swinton has a chameleon-like ability to grab the soul of each age, as she moves through 400 years from Elizabethan to modern, first as a man, then as a woman. Searching, funny and packed with goodies. An exciting adaptation of Virginia Woolf.

☐ Bram Stoker's Dracula (1992, Sky Movies, 10pm, 122 mins). The title is a bold sign that director Francis Ford Coppola has returned to source, and thus lit up his film with a palpable, raging eroticism. A transfixing visual feast which sometimes loses its narrative grip, this also has a splendidly unleashed performance by Gary Oldman, who, as Count Dracula, plays him with the right degree of sadness and menace, and, despite his bouffant hair-do and long finger nails, is never tempted by caricature. Anthony Hopkins, as Van Helsing, is ironed out into one dimension, while Keanu Reeves utters his lines in the manner of the terminally bland. He thus unbalances the otherwise surging drama.

☐ American Gigolo (1980, BBC2, 11.30pm, 120 mins). Perhaps the BBC stalwart who compiled the "100 Best" season ran out of good films at 99. Or perhaps some corporation pen pusher, resentful of the iron grip of John Birt, slid this in to be subversive. Still, even if passionate themes and an aloof style never quite mesh, nor achieve irony, this is at least a stylish plod through American spiritual decay, with Richard Gere's soul-less gigolo in the frame for murder.

☐ Glengarry Glen Ross (1992, Sky Movies, 2.15am, 97 mins). David Mamet's hypnotically dark screenplay folds seamlessly into James Foley's direction, both being able to build static sequences without ever becoming inert, though the action rarely moves outside the real-estate office. Foley's prowling camera unravels the four estate agents who inhabit the moral sewer of modern-day America, a favourite Mamet theme. The exhilarating ensemble acting is all down to Jack Lemmon (the hangdog loser), Alan Arkin (who avoids reality), Ed Harris (frightened but keen), and Al Pacino (an arrogant tough-talker). Both as a tale of vulnerable souls and a metaphor for the state of the nation, this is an American great.

☐ To Catch a Yeti (1993, The Movie Channel, 8am, 4pm, 88 mins). Clownish rock singer Meat Loaf, whose rock 'n' roll furnace removes your hearing for long stretches, brings his burly swagger to this attractively daft children's comedy. Mr Loaf exhibits the right kind of cartoon appeal as gamehunter Big Jack Grisly, who, with his idiot side-kick, pursues the Abominable Snowman. Being, conveniently, only the size of a teddy bear, the snowman hides out in a rucksack and so ends up in New York.

☐ The Rose and the Jackel (1990, BBC2, 2.15pm, 95 mins). Even though Christopher Reeve works across a fairly narrow range, this is quite a distinctive spin on American history, with our own Jack Gold skilfully employing the conflict of duty and passion as a key dramatic device. Reeve is Allan Pinkerton, the head of the Secret Service who, during the Civil War, falls for a lady he's investigating.

☐ The Wooden Horse (1950, BBC2, 6pm, 100 mins). Solidly crafted thrills leave room for humanity and even tears as British PoWs tunnel their way to freedom from under the legendary vaulting horse. The suspense is pumped up and held back at just the right moments.

☐ Missing (1982, Sky Movies Gold, 10pm, 117 mins). Costa-Gavras, who won an Oscar for his screenplay, employs an inquisitive, moving camera and unsettling night-time shots to depict a frightened society coming apart at high speed. The film is based on the Chilean coup of 1973, and on the true tale of an American father's search for this missing son. The thuggish stone-walling of the American representatives adds to an already driving drama, and Jack Lemmon, as the vexed father, makes a memorably intense journey from close-minded patriot to a man changed by the more complex reality.

☐ Patrick (1978, BBC1, 11.35pm, 110 mins). Aside from one startling sequence and a clutch of good ideas (all of them under-expressed), this replaces drama with lengthy telephone conversations and views excitement as hospital staff who shout without reason. Just when the film starts to bite, a sizeable production flaw chews up the script. It's about a comatose killer with telekinetic powers.

☐ A *Private Matter (1993, Sky Movies, 1.45am, 91 mins). Sweeping drama sits comfortably alongside private, personal concerns in this searing warning against the dangers of thalidomide. Based closely on real life, this stars Sissy Spacek as Sherri Finkbine; having taken thalidomide, she realises her fifth child may be born without limbs, opts for abortion and so clashes with the right-to-lifers. Issues never become a thick, clumsy layer on their own but are neatly written into fully-rounded characters. The best of these is Spacek herself, who can fix your gaze even during moments of silence.

☐ Giant (1956, Sky Movies Gold, 8pm, 201 mins). See pick of the week, page 7.

☐ Lethal Weapon 3 (1992, The Movie Channel, 9.35pm, 113 mins). Last play. Driven by the sheer weight of incident, cartoon-style, which distracts from rampant implausibility and the job-lot of clichés, this properly lets special effects serve the narrative. Director Richard Donner, gleefully embracing parody, once again places his buddy-buddy cops at the centre of a familiar police world of infantile wisecracking and half-eaten doughnuts. As before, it is the combination of Mel Gibson's foolish, flashy heroics and Danny Glover's pension-centred common sense that saves Los Angeles for mankind and Lethal Weapon 4.

☐ Close My Eyes (1991, Channel 4, 10pm, 120 mins). Seldom possessed of the feeling it so badly needs, this rarely rises above its clutter of symbols and metaphors in its trawl through contemporary moral decay, British-style. Occasionally all the elements, and the three main performances, are cemented together as the film catches fire. Written and directed by Stephen Poliakoff, this stars Saskia Reeves and Clive Owen as an incestuous brother and sister, and Alan Rickman as her husband. Gritty city streets are dovetailed with lush English greenery, the latter representing the attractive, deceptive surface of much English life.

☐ Bugsy (1991, The Movie Channel, 11.35pm, 135 mins). Never just depending on whitewall tyres, rasping dialogue and zoot suits, director Barry Levinson, who proved equal*ly perceptive with both Diner and Tin Men,* allows style and substance to flow happily in unison. Warren Beatty, meanwhile, as gangster Bugsy Siegel, the single-minded dreamer who built Las Vegas, for once digs deep. Beefy support from Harvey Keitel, Ben Kingsley and Annette Bening, whose romance with Beatty, however, never once shakes the screen.

☐ Jumpin' at the Boneyard (1991, The Movie Channel, 3.25am, 102 mins). An ugly howl at the hopelessness of modern America's grim urban corners, this is a bleak, but supercharged, excursion through the lives of two unsavoury brothers, one hooked on drugs, the other on violence. Though suffocating and unrelieved throughout, it is graced with sturdy, suggestive acting from Alexis Arquette and Tim Roth, who are the very embodiment of cracked, collapsing street life in the Bronx. Roth, in particular, performs with such visceral power that you almost ignore he's acting at all.

ROMANTIC DRAMA OF THE WEEK

War love games

Why are the British soldiers shown at the start of The Life And Death Of Colonel Blimp (today, Saturday, BBC2, 2pm) riding in American trucks? Simple. Because the War Office refused to co-operate, an instruction from the highest level: the Prime Minister himself. In fact, Churchill did his utmost to stop the film being made at all. Had he succeeded he would have deprived the British cinema of one of its richest works. Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger, the writing, producing and directing team who called themselves the Archers, were not deflected by the wrath on high, and it seems, in any case, that the purport of the film was misunderstood. (Ian Christie recently edited the screenplay for Faber and Faber, giving a full account of the problems of gestation.)

The Evening Standard's political cartoonist, David Low, had created a character called Colonel Blimp, a pompous, self-important brasshat, who represented an implacable insistence on tradition, the mentality of fighting the Second World War with the methodology of the First. In Powell and Pressburger's first Technicolor film, Major-General Clive Candy VC (Roger Livesey) is, apart from his towelled appearance in a Turkish bath, entirely unlike Low's Blimp. Apart from his inter-war hobby of shooting endangered animals, he is a supremely decent upper-crust figure, a hero of the Boer War and a good commander in the Great War. By 1940 he finds it hard to accept that his day is done. Following a lead from his manservant (John Laurie), he diverts his energies into the Home Guard. Then Spud Wilson (James McKechnie), a young subaltern in the regulars and boyfriend of Candy's driver, Johnny (Deborah Kerr), trounces him in an exercise in a surprise strike.

Anton Walbrook and Deborah Kerr exchange lovers' glances

A flashback to 1902 reveals Candy obliged to fight a duel in Berlin for insulting the German army. The officer chosen as his opponent is Oberleutenant Theodor Kretschmar-Schuldorff (Anton Walbrook). The preparations are shown in detail, but not the actual duel. They recover in the nursing home from their sabre wounds and become great friends, both falling for an English rose, Edith (Kerr again). Theo wins her and Clive returns to London, never forgetting her. During the First World War he meets an English nurse in France, and marries her after the Armistice. Her name is Barbara and she looks like the Edith of years earlier (the second of Kerr's three roles). He meets Theo again, a prisoner of war about to be repatriated, bitter that Germany has been laid low by the Versailles treaty. The next time they meet is in 1939. Theo is a refugee from the Nazis, and is saved from internment by his friend.

Honour, friendship and loyalty transcend politics and war and suggest to Candy a purpose for winning. Good Germans in films were regarded as unacceptable in wartime, but Powell and Pressburger in 1943 were looking to the peace ahead, directing sympathy towards their sentimental old buffer. Given the climate of the time it is one of the most romantic films in the whole canon of British cinema.

THURSDAY MARCH 9

CHOICE: Fright night; Mountbatten unveiled

Supernatural thrills and deadly chills

Hardly have the final credits rolled on BBC1's Ghosts than the rival channel comes up with Chiller (ITV, 9pm), its tales of the supernatural. Five single dramas kick off with Prophecy, a story by Peter James in which a group of students, including aspiring archaeologist Frannie (Sophie Ward), hold a seance. It turns out to be a bad idea since over the years most of them suffer premature deaths. The explanation seems to lie in the family of Oliver (Nigel Havers), whose ancestors include a 16th-century satanist murdered by Cromwell's troops. It only remains for the script to bring Frannie and Oliver together. Thanks to one of the many extraordinary coincidences on which the story relies, a meeting is duly contrived. Be prepared for twists and shocks.

Lord Louis Mountbatten, according to Secret Lives: Mountbatten (Channel 4, 9pm, see feature page 3), an unflattering profile, worked tirelessly to ensure that history gave him a favourable verdict. He even masterminded the details of his *own state funeral and the manipu*lation continued from beyond the grave. Stripping away the veneer, the programme highlights his accident-prone naval career, his culpa*bility for the disastrous Dieppe raid* and the tragic results of his determination to hurry through Indian independence. His unhappy marriage is also laid bare.

Non-anglers who think that the sport consists of long hours on river banks waiting for something to happen will find their prejudices confirmed in Jobs For the Girls (BBC1, 9.30pm) as Pauline Quirke and Linda Robson try to get hooked on fishing. They have six weeks in which to become good enough to lead opposing teams in a freshwa*ter and deep-sea match off the Isle* of Wight. Jokes centre on the cold and the damp, on not being able to break off to spend a penny and pathetically modest catches. Luckily the show's budget stretches to a visit to Florida, where in contrast to a perpetually gloomy England the sun never fails to shine. Other diversions include a visit to trout farmer (and singer) Roger Daltry.

Andy Kershaw puts on his fur hat and makes for the most northern point of Europe in Alien Nations (Channel 4, 8pm). His search for European minorities takes him to Norway and features the Samis, a nomadic tribe which lives by herding reindeer. There are 40,000 of them in Norway and more in Sweden, Finland and Russia. In the early part of the century Norway tried to Norwegianise them. Now their culture is guaranteed but their land is under threat. Having unsuc*cessfully contested a hydro-electric* project they face the intrusion of multinational companies exploring for diamonds.

Going in mob handed

KICKING off a seven-part series today, If Tomorrow Comes (Sky One, 2pm) concerns the struggle of a young woman to re-build her life after serving a prison sentence for a crime she did not commit.

Based on a best-selling novel by Sidney Sheldon, it stars Liam Neeson, star of Steven Spielberg's Schindler's List, and Tom Berenger. The story follows Tracy Whitney (Madolyn Smith, right), who is shocked to hear about the death of her widowed mother in New Orleans. But Tracy does not believe her mother committed suicide and goes there to try to find out what happened. And what happened is that her mother was cheated in a property deal by the local mob. So Tracy visits the mob leader's home with a gun — a bad move. After a struggle, Tracy flees, but is arrested and charged with theft and attempted murder.

FILMS ON TELEVISION

WEDNESDAY

MARCH 8

☐ FDR: The Last Year (1980, Channel 4, 2.25pm, 95 mins). Part II. Nominated for an Emmy for this role, Jason Robards gives a detailed portrait of Roosevelt in his last year, a man who exudes power even in the smallest moments. These, plus the epic swirl of history, are successfully nailed to a large canvass by British director Anthony Page. Though Robards' fleshy authority is well to the fore, his able sidekicks include Eileen Heckhart, Kim Hunter, Michael Gross and Kathryn Walker.

☐ The Man in the Moon (1991, Sky Movies, 6pm, 99 mins). Newcomer Reese Witherspoon gives an extremely knowing performance as the 14-year-old girl, hooked on Elvis, who goes giddy over the boy nextdoor. He, in turn, goes dopey over her older sister. Director Robert Mulligan, an old hand at adolescent angst, only swerves from emotional truth when deciding to overheat the text.

☐ The Three Faces of Eve (1957, Sky Movies Gold, 8pm, 110 mins). Nunnally Johnson's direction is flat in the extreme, ridiculous when you consider the subject under the lens is schizophrenia. Stanley Cortez, whose camerwork suggests he knows what's needed, is thus held back by his director. However, this is really Joanne Woodward's film. She explodes with credibility in the schizophrenic role, playing bored housewife, come-on flirt and smart-woman-about-town. Narrated by Alistair Cooke.

☐ Murder C.O.D (1990, BBC1, 12.30am, 95 mins). All the usual well rehearsed moves decorate this cat-and-mouse cop hunt, with the obsessive police commander constantly out-smarted by the intelligent criminal until, of course, the final reel when the law breaker is nabbed so the film can end. William Devane plays the technological clever-cloggs who eavesdrops on total strangers, in particular a couple where the husband is a wife beater. He shoots the husband and sends his wife a $10,000 invoice, one of the film's few black comic strokes.

☐ Blood In, Blood Out (1992, Sky Movies, 12.55am, 173 mins). Many recent American films have covered inner-city ugliness with a thick blanket of cliché. Largely avoiding such suffocation by paying attention to the detail of his characters, Taylor Hackford follows three young lives as they are pushed and pulled by the ad hoc violence of East Los Angeles. His themes and his pumping suspense are well suited to his use of epic scale.

☐ Dirty Mary, Crazy Larry (1974, Sky Movies, 3.50am, 93 mins). If you want to go out and make a pared down, stunt-driven road movie, with no pretence at trifles like characterisation, then this is the textbook example, indulging in endless manic free-wheeling. Peter Fonda (who drives fast) and Susan George (who giggles a lot) rob a supermarket and smash into so many cars that you'll stay deaf until Christmas. The pleasure of destruction is the best joke of all.

THURSDAY

MARCH 9

☐ The Portrait (1993, Sky Movies, 10am, 6pm, 86 mins). Director Arthur Penn, returning to the medium deserted after the golden age of drama was over, brings a cinematic depth to this television film, and is joined in excellence by Gregory Peck and Lauren Bacall, playing an ageing married couple. Peck's real-life daughter, Cecilia, also pushes the right buttons as the couple's artist daughter.

☐ Seconds (1966, The Movie Channel, 2.10pm, 106 mins). A striking parable about the shakiness of looking beyond one's self to achieve real change, this is about a frustrated middle-aged financier who is turned into Rock Hudson, a swinging, free-thinking artist. Angular camera work reflects the protagonist's increasing discomfort and, 30 years on, the climax still thrills with its terror.

☐ Beyond the Forest (1949, Channel 4, 2.15pm, 100 mins). See pick of the week, page 7.

☐ Where the Lillies Bloom (1974, BBC1, 2.15pm, 95 mins). A rich tale of growing up in adversity, with a pointed script and resonant performances to match, this is set in the midst of Appalachian rural poverty. Squeezing out a living as a sharecropper on land he once owned, a widower, on the point of death, asks his four kids not to fritter money away on either doctors or undertakers. When he dies, the children, afraid they will be separated if taken into care, continue as before.

☐ The Enemy Below (1957, Sky Movies Gold, 6pm, 98 mins). Robert Mitchum holds many scenes with his bluff, monosyllabic demeanour in a sprightly action blast where an American destroyer and German U-boat play hide and seek. Relying sensibly on character as much as action, this nonetheless has Oscar-winning effects which impress even today.

☐ Separate Tables (1958, Sky Movies Gold, 8pm, 99 mins). Disillusion and deceit beneath polished manners emerge through a series of layered characters at an English seaside holiday home, whose gentile poise is at odds with the reality of assorted lives. Burt Lancaster and Rita Hayworth are a divorced couple heading towards a second round of marriage, but particularly shining throughout are Wendy Hiller, as Lancaster's mistress, whose identity is totally wrapped up in his, and David Niven, a supposed war hero, who lets sadness seep out through the charm.

☐ When He's Not A Stranger (1989, BBC1, midnight, 90 mins). A serious, searching look at being raped by someone you know, this easily keeps its suspense afloat, but without either the cheap tricks of melodrama or any diversion from the truth. Annabeth Gish has no trouble capturing the insecurity, confusion and determination of a student who, invited back for coffee by her best pal, is then raped.

☐ The Meanest Man In The World (1943, Channel 4, 2.35am, 65 mins). Making a few smart points about success at all costs, this engaging froth casts Jack Benny as a struggling small-town lawyer who, keen to marry, opens an office in New York. Motivated naturally by sentiment, he soon takes his valet's advice and acts tough. Success follows, but so does unhappiness. Benny heartily enjoys himself in this crazy role and his verbal sparring with Eddie 'Rochester' Anderson (the valet) is a joy.

FRIDAY

MARCH 10

☐ Cold Turkey (1971, Sky Movies, 2pm, 99 mins). Dick van Dyke manages to be earnest yet chirpy as a mid-American minister who's convinced his town can give up smoking for a month in return for a tidy prize of $25 million. As a satire on morals and mores, it is focused and funny when possessed of ideas, otherwise it resorts to the same running gags.

☐ Don't Take It To Heart (1944, Channel 4, 2.20pm, 100 mins). The sort of affectionate, anarchic satire one associates with Ealing, this is a surprisingly accomplished debut by novelist-turned-director Jeffrey Dell, who sustains his tone of spirited irreverance from first frame to last. Even if some of the jokes are a tad overworked (like the decrepid butler's distinctive walk through haunted castle corridors), this has many deft comic touches. A bomb unleashes a ghost and local village politics.

☐ The Slender Thread (1965, The Movie Channel, 2.55pm, 98 mins). Sydney Pollack, grappling with first-time directing, doesn't quite know when to push his drama for maximum effect, and lets a certain stylisation intrude. However, at least there's efficient playing from Anne Bancroft, a suicide who changes her mind, and Sidney Poitier who keeps her on the phone.

☐ The Apartment (1960, Sky Movies Gold, 8pm, 125 mins). Ever a director who can pack a film with ingredients, all of which settled down beautifully, Billy Wilder leaps successfully from sentiment to cynicism and back again. Jabbing away at modern materialist ambition through a low-rung accountant (who begins to climb the ladder by lending his apartment to executives), Wilder also embraces the human frailty behind such slick moves and so sentiment finds a place. Jack Lemmon, as the lead, employs his mixture of eagerness and vulnerability to great effect. Little touches, such as Shirley MacLaine confessing to three affairs while raising four fingers, considerably thicken the texture.

☐ Just a Gigolo (1979, Channel 4, 12.35am, 120 mins). It's always a shame to look in on actors who, however hard they try, cannot overcome the basic ineptitude of their director. Here, amazingly failing to find life in 1920s Berlin, director David Hemmings delivers a series of clanking set-pieces rather than a considered whole, with the entire uncertain escapade buffeted between anaemic tragedy and coarse farce. Yet the single remaining pleasure is in the casting. Dietrich energises the film when she croons the title song. Kim Novak lets an emotional depth emerge from behind her beauty, and Sydne Rome is occasionally touching as David Bowie's childhood sweetheart.

☐ One Dangerous Night (1943, Channel 4, 2.35am, 80 mins). Warren William as the Lone Wolf brings his appealing comic instincts to the thief-turned-sleuth, with Eric Blore attracting the most laughter as the Wolf's waspish valet. As the hero proves himself innocent of murder, suspense is kept on a nice, tight leash.

DRAMA OF THE WEEK

Against the odds

Alexia Keogh, one of three actresses to play Janet Frame

The New Zealand-born writer and director Jane Campion has made only three feature-length films, but already qualifies for a position in the front rank of film-makers. With its three Oscars, the Cannes Palme d'Or and many other international awards, her 1993 work The Piano has established her as one of the most formidable of the new women directors.

Channel 4's series Reel Women has selected her second film (the first was Sweetie in 1989) and is showing it for the first time on television as a continuous work, as it was in the cinemas, instead of in its original form as a television mini-series on three separate evenings. An Angel At My Table (Monday, Channel 4, 10.55pm) is an extraordinary study in human resilience, adapted from the autobiography of New Zealand's most distinguished novelist, Janet Frame.

Campion reconstructs Frame's childhood and early adulthood, using three actresses to represent her at various ages. Alexia Keogh is the child, Karen Ferguson the teenager and Kerry Fox (recently seen in Shallow Grave) is the adult. The director has managed to achieve with the trio a consistency not only in appearance (given assistance by Frame's striking mop of red curls) but in characterisation.

Frame was born in 1924 into a poor family living in a rural area on the South Island, and her twin died almost immediately. Her eldest sister was to drown and her brother faced a lifetime struggling against epilepsy. The film shows how at school she is isolated and introverted, her ability to write poetry perceived as an outlandish eccentricity. Teaching is regarded as a suitable career for her. As a student her inwardness becomes more acute. The crisis is reached when, overcome by nerves and shyness, she dries in front of a class and an inspector. She has a breakdown and is packed off to a mental hospital where in monstrous false diagnosis her condition is recorded as schizophrenic, probably incurable. On account of her lack of sociability, a young woman on the threshold of her adult life is locked up, subjected to more than 200 doses of electric shock treatment. After eight years of institutional incarceration she is about to be lobotomised.

She is saved, having won a literary award for some short stories, its organisers not appreciating her situation, and she is released, allegedly cured of an affliction she did not have. Campion could have left the narrative there, as the world beyond and success as a writer beckons, and no doubt that is what Hollywood would have done. Instead, she shows the difficulties Frame faces adjusting to freedom, her first journey abroad to be immersed in London's Bohemian set of the 1950s. There is the matter of losing her virginity and becoming pregnant. Then the Maudsley Hospital confirms that she is perfectly sound in mind and was never schizophrenic.

Campion's film is long, with more than 140 speaking parts, but it is always absorbing. The irritating camera tricks of The Piano are absent; it is a straightforward, unhysterical narrative, its remarkable story needing no embellishment.

Making Whoopi by numbers

WHATEVER happened to Whoopi Goldberg? No, she hasn't disappeared, but her career seems to have wandered off into a wilderness of lightweight, acting-by-numbers roles. And it all started so well with The Color Purple in 1985. She showed how underused her talent is when she won an Oscar in 1990 for best supporting actress in Ghost. So why does she accept scripts which offer so little, such as Sister Act and Star Trek: Generations?

In 1993 came Made in America (Sky Movies, 10pm), with Ted Danson (above). This comedy has Whoopi as a career woman whose daughter discovers she is the product of artificial insemination — and her father is a white used-car salesman.

WEDNESDAY MARCH 8

CHOICE: Cancer therapy goes private; puzzle of lost ship; Rantzen's rewards; war memories

Brave and worthy get the star treatment

Charles Stewart and Malcolm Hirst, the team responsible for a memorable series about Lewisham council, turn their attention to a bastion of private medicine in Modern Times: Harley Street (BBC2, 8.30pm). It is easy to condemn a system in which vain women are prepared to pay £4,500 for a face-lift and specialists add lashings of jam to their NHS bread and butter. But Stewart and Hirst present the evidence and leave the opinions to us. At the heart of their film is a contentious new treatment for breast cancer known as high-dose chemotherapy. It is both hideously expensive (£60,000) and unproven. But with the disease affecting one British woman in 11, there is no shortage of takers.

The largest single ship to be lost in British martime history was the Derbyshire, a bulk carrier which sank 14 years ago in the South China Seas. All 44 crew members died. The official report suggested that the ship had been "overwhelmed by the forces of nature" during a typhoon. But families of the victims, and maritime safety experts, have long campaigned for a new inquiry. The ITN team of Rob White and Rory MacLean has been following the story for four years for Dispatches (Channel 4, 9pm). Their film reveals that doubts about the Derbyshire's design go back to the 1970s when it and similar ships were being built on Teesside.

Prepare to welcome more unsung heroes who, thanks to Esther Rantzen and Hearts of Gold (BBC1, 8pm), are unsung no longer. As usual the recipients of the Hearts of Gold award are beyond criticism. But the show's format, which involves luring these brave and worthy people into the sudio under false pretences and in showbusiness schmaltz, is something else. Not for nothing are Rantzen's latest cohorts a game-show host, Carol Smillie, and a comic, Mickey Hutton.

Jeremy Isaacs decided to end his vast television history of the Second World War by leaving aside the great figures and the decisive engagements and evoking the experience of conflict through ordinary fighting men. The World At War: Remember (BBC2, 7pm) made a moving documentary more than 20 years ago and it still does. As we brace ourselves for an avalanche of commemorations in the approach to VE Day, it will be worth checking whether any come close to this simple, affecting film.

WEDNESDAY MARCH 8

Romance blooms in the Woods

JAMES Woods makes a welcome appearance in the 1993 romantic comedy Jane's House (Sky Movies, 8pm). He avoids the usual hard-man roles to play Paul Moore, a recently widowed father-of-two who is struggling to raise his teenage daughter and young son in the absence of his wife Jane, who died the previous year. Lucky for him, he bumps into Mary Cole (Anne Archer, with Woods above), an independently-minded manageress of a sports PR company, and their relationship, although a little shaky at first, soon blossoms into marriage.

But it is here that the problems begin, as Mary tries to adapt to life in the suburbs, Paul's children and, above all, the house which still bears Jane's mark.

Directed by Glenn Jordan, Jane's House also stars Missy Crider and Graham Beckel.

SATURDAY MARCH 4

Eight hours of programmes, with more to come tomorrow. Is the cannabis debate really worth all that much screen time? Channel 4 clearly thinks so, hence Pot Night, which starts at 8pm and finishes at 4.15am. The project will be denounced by some as glorifying an illegal drug and welcomed by others who want the law changed. What matters, in television terms, is the quality of the programmes and here one can point to a catholic mix of history, reportage, fantasy and opinion. There is a study of how smoking pot has gone in tandem with fashions in popular music, a look at law enforcement by police in Britain and Sweden, and a tour of the cannabis parlours of Amsterdam. For those still not exhausted, The Great Pot Debate is screened tomorrow at 8pm.

More French lessons in the art of murder

Bookmark (BBC2, 8.05pm) is that its profile of Edith Wharton is being screened towards the end of The Buccaneers instead of at the beginning. But Wharton's life and career deserve scrutiny in their own right. The film is called A Lady Does Not Write, the male put-down for aspiring female authors in well-heeled New York in the late 19th century. But Wharton did write and she went on to earn the present-day equivalent of $1 million a book. She took control of her life in other ways, building her own house and dumping her unfaithful husband. No wonder that the feminist movement has adopted her as a heroine.

First screened in October 1993, Tender Loving Care (BBC1, 9.15pm) marked Dawn French's arrival as a straight actress. From comedienne to serial killer was a big jump but French managed it with chilly conviction. French is a nurse on the night shift in a Welsh hospital, affecting concern for her elderly patients but discreetly bumping them off when the mood takes her. The point of the piece, by Lucy Gannon of Soldier, Soldier and Peak Practice, is obscure, beyond telling us that people in positions of trust can be mad and dangerous. But it is bleakly compelling drama, with fine support from Rosemary Leach as French's simple-minded assistant.

American television quiz shows which gripped millions of the viewers in the 1950s were often rigged. Robert Redford's new film Quiz Show dramatises one particular case. The Quiz Show Scandal (BBC2, 4.40pm) is a documentary treatment which takes a wider view. The lure of these shows was watching ordinary people winning huge sums of money. Some contestants became favourites with viewers and helped to push up the ratings. Others, equally successful, were felt to be ratings liabilities. Hence the jiggery-pokery.

SUNDAY MARCH 5

Movies without a hitch

BRAVO gives full play to Alfred Hitchcock's penchant for suspense, unusual atmosphere and development tonight. First off is Spellbound (4pm), starring Gregory Peck and Ingrid Bergman (right), about a man suffering amnesia who believes he has committed a murder. Bergman plays a doctor who risks all to cure Peck, and so solve the puzzle.

Next up is The Paradine Case (6pm), with Peck and Charles Laughton, about a woman accused of murdering her blind husband in order to marry her lover. Peck is the defence lawyer who becomes so infatuated by her that he fights for her life.

To finish is Notorious (8pm) about an alcoholic (Bergman again) who is coerced by an FBI man (Cary Grant) to marry a Nazi sympathiser (Claude Rains) and then spy on him. Terrific.

TUESDAY MARCH 7

To appease the reader who accuses this column of a campaign against the balding Australian, let me say that Clive James — Postcard From Berlin (BBC1, 9.30pm) contains one of his funniest routines as well as a numbing moment when jokes are laid aside and the brutality of the Third Reich comes starkly to the surface. The running gag is built around the Trabant car, an evil-smelling rattletrap that has been swept away with the rest of the former East Germany. An obvious prop, but James exploits it brilliantly. Abruptly switching the mood, he shows us the prison where opponents of Hitler were confined and the hooks from which they were hanged. Easy giggles at a nudist beach soon follow but even at his most flippant, James is never dull.

Promising an "endless array of magically spiced foods", Madhur

US detective caught in a vice-like grip

Jaffrey's Flavours of* India (BBC2, 8.30pm, see feature page 5) begins a culinary tour of India in Kerala. Here is the land of spices, but also the land of coconuts. Both feature strongly in Jaffrey's dishes, cooked out of doors in the manner of Keith Floyd. The frequent diversions into topography and culture are also Floydian, though there the similarity ends. Jaffrey may be an actress but she makes Floyd seem like a ham. She is an enthusiastic presenter who knows her subject down to the last grain of black pepper.

For 25 years the unfortunately-named Fred Clapp was a detective with the Los Angeles police. His speciality was the vice trade and his daily contact was with hookers, pimps and madams. Inventive and resourceful, he organised stings which have passed into LA legend. He once arrested 23 call girls by luring them to a non-existent party. He made a colleague dress up as an Ethiopian prince to help a drugs bust. But work became an obsession. In Network First: Hollywood Vice (ITV, 10.40pm) Clapp admits that he felt more comfortable with police life than home life. The penalties were two failed marriages and strained relationships with his sons. The testimonies of the wives, the sons, fellow cops and a gravel-voiced madam make their contribution to a garish story.

The restaurant critic of The Times takes over the J'Accuse slot of Without Walls (Channel 4, 9pm) to let us know where he stands on vegetarians. In a nutshell, Jonathan Meades thinks they are nuts, and sanctimonious with it. He even brings in Adolf Hitler, "the most influential vegetarian of the 20th century", a lover of animals but not of human beings. Vegetarians hit back by comparing battery chicken farms to the gas chambers of Auschwitz. Which should give the flavour of a film that is lively, combative and often very funny.

Deadly battle for life

MILLIONS of pounds have been poured into developing military hardware to maintain our national security, but there is another, potentially more devastating problem — environmental security.

Top Guns and Toxic Whales (Discovery, 10pm) is an investigation into how countries could be forced to react to ecological threats to the most basic needs of their people for clean air, water, food and energy. As an example, the programme focuses on the potential for conflict in the Nile basin. Although shared by nine countries, only Egypt and Sudan have agreed how this crucial resource should be used.

Now military strategists have joined environmentalists in condemning the growing tide of industrial pollution, which threatens not only human life but that of other creatures, such as whales.

Winners and losers in the race to the altar

After her late flowering as a novelist, Mary Wesley is proving equally successful as a source for audience-grabbing television drama. After The Camomile Lawn and Harnessing Peacocks, her latest work to hit the screen is The Vacillations of Poppy Carew (ITV, 9pm). Left a fortune by her father, Poppy (Tara Fitzgerald) is in the happy position of being able to choose between four potential suitors knowing that she will not have to marry any of them for their money. But picking winners is not her strong point. Handsomely filmed in England and Tunis, and meticulously directed by the reliable James Cellan-Jones, this is a shrewd concoction of romance, humour and fantasy.

It is 83 years since the Titanic sank off Newfoundland with the loss of 1,500 lives but the story refuses to die. Encounters (Channel 4, 7pm) follows an expedition led by a New England car dealer, George Tulloch, who won the legal right to salvage the wreck. Divers go out from a submarine 2½ miles below the sea to pick over the remains of the ship and gather artefacts for Tulloch's planned travelling exhibition of the Titanic's treasures. Tulloch is also interested in how the disaster happened and feels that the Titanic's captain, Edward Smith, may have been unfairly blamed.

Messengers From Moscow (BBC2, 10.30pm), the excellent Soviet-centred history of the Cold War, reaches the 1960s. Blocked by Nato in the west and at odds with China in the east, the Soviet Union turned to the Third World. Castro's revolution in Cuba took Moscow by surprise but Khrushchev was not slow in trying to exploit it in the name of world socialism. The programme suggests that the decision to site Soviet missiles in Cuba came before the Bay of Pigs fiasco and not as a riposte. In any case, the missile crisis ended in humiliation and hastened Khrushchev's downfall. The Soviet Union's intervention in the Vietnam war was no more successful.

There are hints that Jean and Lionel are finally heading for the altar in As Time Goes By (BBC1, 7pm). If they do, Bob Larbey's gentle comedy of middle-aged romance must surely come to an end because it has been largely sustained by the couple's indecision. Meanwhile the fourth series opens where the last one left off, with Jean and Lionel bickering about nothing very much.

The Eagles have (finally) landed

FLICK through the dust-covered collection of (almost-obsolete) LPs of any baby boomer and you're virtually guaranteed to find the Eagles's classic album, Hotel California. These soft-rockers from America's West Coast almost camped out in the singles charts in the late 1970s with a string of hits, such as "One of These Nights", "Lyin' Eyes" and "New Kid in Town".

Now, the band has joined the nostalgia bandwagon and is touring again — the first time since 1980. Before Glenn Frey, Don Henley and the others hit the road, they specially recorded a concert at the Burbank Studios in Los Angeles for MTV. Eagles Special: Hell Freezes Over (8pm) is an hour-long musical journey through the band's extraordinary career — and an inspiration to give that 12in piece of vinyl a spin once more.

MONDAY MARCH 6

CHOICE: another hello to Dolly; lest we forget; refugees in the firing line; sex and the Empire

Forgotten plight of those who suffer amnesia

Fans of Lynda La Plante's Widows and Widows 2 will welcome She's Out (ITV, 9pm, see feature page 5), the latest episode in the life and times of Dolly Rawlins. Back in the 1980s she was the boss of the gang of desperate women who pulled off a heist their husbands failed to achieve. Having gone to prison for murdering her husband nine years ago, Dolly (Ann Mitchell) is set free, determined to set up a children's refuge with the money from her stashed stolen diamonds. Equally determined are six of her former prison mates who want a piece of Dolly's action.

"Like trying to fill an empty box," is how 17-year-old Stewart Norriss's mother describes the process of helping her son regain his memory. After hitting his head on the kitchen table, he was unable to remember even basic skills such as dressing himself. Stewart's is one of three cases in Cutting Edge: Amnesia (Channel 4, 9pm), an examination of the impact of amnesia on sufferers and their families. While Stewart has re-learnt most of what he lost, John Spencer cannot retain information for more than 30 seconds. And Keith Warren cannot even convince the doctors that he has got amnesia.

Tanzania woke up one morning last year to find itself home to more than one million Rwandan refugees. In just two days Benaco, the camp built by the aid agencies, became Tanzania's second largest city. Horizon: Exodus (BBC2, 8pm) follows an environmental assessment team as it tries to assess the effects on local resources and population of such a large influx of people. The team also attempts to draw up a blueprint for future refugee camps. As the experts argue among themselves it is hard not to feel anger at the refugees' plight.

The phrase "no sex, please, we're British" was not, it seems, one the armies of the British empire took to heart. The second programme in David Wilson's excellent series Ruling Passions: Sex, Race and Empire (BBC2, 10pm) focuses on the battle fought by the Colonial War Office against venereal disease. In 1896, it was alleged that more than half the army stationed in India was infected. This posed a far greater threat for the Empire than any putative rebellion. When its policy of legalising brothels fell foul of domestic Victorian prudery, the War Office tried deterrent, then containment and finally segregation. None of it worked.

Dear Patient,

I am writing to you because I belie
practised in Kensington and Camden,

Mr Advani died of an AIDS-related records, so that we can contact eve

I would like to make it plain that the r
Mr Advani is small. The virus can or to another.

But clearly you have the right to kno

Just after one o'clock my car radio broadcast the news: "Former dentist Dr Vikram Advani has died of an Aids-related disease. Here is the helpline number. His former patients will be offered counselling and an HIV test. There is very little risk . . ."

My dentist. My husband's dentist.

I have two children. One has just turned five, the other will be four in April. They were conceived after I had been treated by Advani. After my husband had been treated by Advani. And Advani had carried out root canal surgery on me — a bloody business.

My car had moved from the Old Street roundabout near the City of London to just outside the offices of The Guardian newspaper in Farringdon Road without my having any memory of having driven the half mile or so. My mind was locked in the dingy little surgery on the Camden Road, north London, where Advani first treated me. Lying back in that chair, Advani gossiping about polo matches, and name-dropping for all he was worth. I noticed that he was preparing to start my root canal treatment bare-handed.

I asked him why his hands were bare. Although I cannot remember his reply he made me feel that I should have not have asked, and it was embarrassment, embarrassment, that made me resist the temptation to get up and leave the surgery.

A deft change of subject: all my amalgam fillings should be replaced with porcelain ones because "the mercury in the amalgam" was slowly poisoning me. And I searched my memory to conjure up a picture of those hands: were they cut or injured in any way? Could his blood have infected mine?

It was a recommendation from a friend, an aching face and a catalogue of hopelessness by a former dentist that took me to Advani's chair in the late 1980s. And when, in the early 1990s, he told me he would no longer treat me on the National Health I reluctantly agreed to pay for private treatment for the first time in my life. Advani's opting out of the National Health Service rang no alarm bells because plenty of dentists were doing the same at the time: they objected to the new National Health contracts.

This was not Advani's reason: in 1991 his doctor advised him to stop dental work. So he simply closed down his National Health practice and continued private work from his smart house in Kensington, west London. By that time he had already been diagnosed as HIV positive and was "beginning to be unwell", as Kensington & Chelsea & Westminster Health Authority put it. Presumably the onset of Aids.

Never, at any stage, did it occur to me to check my dentist's credentials, let alone his state of health. None of his other 1,400 patients could have known he was HIV positive, and his doctor, understandably, took Advani's word that he had stopped practising.

Anyway, under current practices, none of us has a right to know the state of health of our doctor, nurse or dentist. It is deemed vital that the identity of HIV sufferers be kept confidential. So important, in fact, that even the HIV sufferer must be kept from the news that he or she is infected — unless they have elected to be tested. If you or I were to be found to be HIV positive during a routine blood test (I have, almost certainly, twice been tested for HIV without my consent,

SCOTT HAMILTON: No American visitor seems more popular on these shores at the moment than this lyrical exponent of mainstream saxophone whose prime models are the great swing men, from Lester Young to Ben Webster and Zoot Sims. Hamilton is no stranger to British rhythm sections — he worked with the choice team of pianist Brian Lemon, bassist Dave Green and drummer Allan Ganley on the 1993 album, East of the Sun. Fresh from his annual engagement with Rosemary Clooney at the Rockefeller Center's cabaret in the sky, the Rainbow and Stars, he has maintained his prolific recording schedule; his latest session, Organic Duke, was recorded with Mike LeDonne at the Hammond organ.

MASK ORCHESTRA: Last month's South Bank concert by Colin Towns's big band, the Mask Orchestra, resulted in rave reviews. The quality of the musicians played a part — Towns was able to call on the services of the hot young trumpeter Gerard Presencer and the saxophonists Nigel Hitchcock and Peter King — but his individual melodies and arrangements are his principal asset. His short tour caps a busy period for Towns — it is his orchestral score that you can hear supporting the heaving bosoms (metaphorically speaking) in the BBC's adaptation of Edith Wharton's novel, The Buccaneers.

P. J. HARVEY/TRICKY: Having dismissed her previous two-man rhythm section, Polly Harvey embarks on her first tour for nearly two years with an expanded line-up which includes multi-instrumentalist John Parish and guitarist Joe Gore (best known for his work with Tom Waits). Always a riveting performer, she will be showcasing material from her splendidly spooky new album, To Bring You My Love. Support is provided by Tricky, the Bristolian "trip hop" star whose debut album, Maxinquaye, has followed Portishead's Dummy to become one of the surprise sensations of the year.

FOREIGNER/THE DOOBIE BROTHERS: An unlikely blast from the past from a pair of bands which most observers understandably assumed had gone down with all hands on deck many years ago. Singer Lou Gramm and guitarist Mick Jones reconvened Foreigner in 1992, and they seem to have been touring ever since. The reunion has "nothing to do with nostalgia" according to Gramm who insists, somewhat implausibly, that "We're picking up right where we left off". Although Foreigner is the bigger band, it is support act The Doobie Brothers which has enjoyed the more recent hit — a remixed version of Long Train Running, which breached the UK Top Ten last summer — and which has returned to the fray with its original line-up intact.

WESTMINSTER CENTENARY: What better way to celebrate the centenary of Westminster Cathedral than by the performance of a work that unites the genius of two of the greatest English Catholics? The work is The Dream of Gerontius, Cardinal Newman's vivid poem charting a soul's journey to heaven, set to music of unsurpassable dignity and splendour by Elgar. In this performance, conducted by that estimable Elgarian, Andrew Davis, the title-role is sung by Dennis O'Neill, with the BBC Symphony Orchestra and Chorus in attendance.
Westminster Cathedral (advance booking from South Bank box office, 0171-928 8800), Fri 10, 7.30pm.

NEW CONSORTS: Perhaps the most imaginative homage to Purcell in his tercentenary year is a project based round the viol consort Fretwork. Twelve contemporary composers — Russian, Australian, Chinese and Scandinavian as well as British — have been commissioned to write new works for viols inspired by the fantasias that Purcell wrote for viol consort in 1680. The new works will be played in two concerts (the second is in May) alongside the original Purcell pieces. A delightful idea; let us hope that the creativity of today's composers measures up to Purcell's masterpieces.

THE CUNNING LITTLE VIXEN: Lesley Garrett, that lissome little whirlwind of an earth-spirit, returns in triumph as Janáček's fox-woman, charting her life-cycle — from pre-teen ingénue to flapper to mother of countless cubs darning socks in cardie and slippers — with irrepressible energy. She also sings wonderfully, the words emerging clearly through her bright, athletic soprano. Nicholas Folwell's Forester is her worthy partner, David Pountney's classic production remains as touching as it is funny and Stephen Barlow catches precisely the right balance between passion and care in his conducting. On such a night as this any talk of "a reduced role" for English National Opera is simply unthinkable.
Coliseum, St Martin's Lane, London WC2 (0171-836 3161), today at 3pm (with the hugely promising Mary Plazas as the Vixen) and 7.30pm; Wed 8 and Fri 10 at 7.30pm. ♿

OBERTO: Last chance to catch Opera North's zingy staging of Verdi's first opera, which is much more than just an act of pious archaeology — the work has a craggy energy all its own as well as countless pre-echoes of masterpieces still to come. John Tomlinson both directs and sings the grizzled paterfamilias of the title role, and there is appropriately sturdy support from Rita Cullis and Linda Finnie. David Porcelijn is the no-nonsense conductor, lamming into the score for all it (and he) is worth.

INDIAN INK: The main character, a young English poet in the 1930s Raj, needs to be played with more abrasiveness and astringency than Felicity Kendal manages to give her. But Tom Stoppard's latest is still a warm, intelligent, funny piece, which jumps across the decades to mount a lively debate on colonialism, the nationality gap, the Anglicisation of the Indians and the Indianisation of some of the English.

THE BRONTES: The lives as well as the work of literature's second most famous three sisters — Charlotte, Emily and Anne — provide the raw material for Northern Ballet Theatre's new work. Director Christopher Gable and choreographer Gillian Lynne tell the story from the viewpoint of the girls' father, Patrick Brontë, vicar of Haworth, who saw his wife, son and five daughters all die before him. The music has been written by Dominic Muldowney and the designs are by Lez Brotherston. This week's premiere at Leeds (only a few miles from where the family lived and wrote their masterworks) starts a national tour taking in Darlington, Halifax, Nottingham, Plymouth, Cardiff, Sheffield, Woking and Newcastle.
Grand Theatre, Leeds (0113 245 9351), Mon 6 to Sat 11 at 7.30pm, also Thur 9 and Sat 11 at 2pm. ♿

BIRMINGHAM ROYAL BALLET: Two more premieres this week. Marion Tait becomes the first British dancer to play Antony Tudor's celebrated dance drama, Pillar of Fire, with a British company. Set to Schoenberg's Transfigured Night it was created in 1942 and together with Balanchine's Tchaikovsky display piece, Theme and Variations (premiered in 1947), forms part of Birmingham's Forties festival. Bartók's Third Piano Concerto, also from that decade, is the score for the programme's other premiere, Libramenta, by one of the company's dancers, Oliver Hindle.

QUIZ SHOW (15): Robert Redford, wearing his director's cap, resurrects a fascinating episode in 1950s America, when the television quiz show Twenty One was rocked by scandal. A disgruntled proletariat Jew (John Turturro) takes revenge on the WASP (Ralph Fiennes) who replaces him as champion. Redford is fighting a lost battle when he bemoans the ascent of television culture, but his elegy for civilised values is sustained by an amusing script and brilliant performances.

He secures background authenticity by mixing star actors with the confusion and silliness of Paris's fashion show week, though the stars remain caricatures, while insights and good jokes are in short supply. Diversions include Kim Basinger's television commentator, Marcello Mastroianni and Sophia Loren echoing their past, and the eye-boggling costumes.

DE KOONING: The last survivor of the heroic generation of Abstract Expressionists comes to London in a rumbustious Tate retrospective. Now 91, Willem de Kooning has occupied a leading place in American painting for half a century. But the onset of Alzheimer's has brought his work to an end, and so the exhibition has the feeling of a memorial survey. After hesitant beginnings in the late 1930s, Dutch-born de Kooning developed the no-holds-barred approach which would make him notorious. He never became wholly abstract, preferring to concentrate on the female figure and the landscape. But the freedom and energy of his mark-making have a barbaric life of their own. Although his finest paintings were produced around 1950, de Kooning had staying-power and arrived at another convulsive peak in the late 1970s.

YVES KLEIN: Infamous during his lifetime as a showman who smeared naked women with blue paint, Klein is still suspected of charlatanism. But the Hayward Gallery's lucidly installed survey reveals a surprisingly varied and thoughtful artist. Although he died of a heart attack at 34, Klein achieved a great deal in his short career. His monochrome paintings can be very powerful, and they provide the show with its most sublime moments. But he also staged some memorable, witty performances, explored the possibilities of sponges and flames, and opened up a range of unexpected avenues for younger artists to explore. That is why his own work still looks fresh and provocative.

THE GROTESQUE: Man's imaginative capacity to make the weird weirder and turn everyday objects into bizarre fantasy goes back in art at least as far as Pompeii. While there is a lot of grotesquery in medieval art this show of grotesque prints from the British Museum's collections starts with the renaissance rediscovery of ancient Roman decorations and follows this tradition through from the early 16th century to the mid 18th. Fantastic creatures pose obligingly with normal human beings, or arrange themselves into decorative patterns; animals and humans are assembled, Frankenstein-fashion, from unlikely materials.

KOREA THROUGH JAPANESE AND CHINESE EYES: Korea has all too frequently been the battleground for neighbouring nations. In 1894-1895 China and Japan fought over it, the Japanese winning. Both sides reflected on the conflict in traditional woodblock prints, and the British Library unexpectedly has more than 200 of them. The present selection covers both sides in the conflict. The Japanese are full of energy, lauding the most modern technology used and offering heroic images of popular soldiers. The Chinese produce rather static set-pieces of battle, in every way much more primitive. On this evidence the outcome of the war can never have been much in doubt.

HEATHER ALSTON

Ruth Gledhill combines a service with shopping at the MetroCentre in Gateshead

AT YOUR SERVICE

SOME people fight and others run away, but when the going gets tough, I go shopping. There can surely be nowhere better to combine a church service with self-service than Gateshead's MetroCentre, Europe's largest shopping centre. What made this spot of retail therapy worth the five-hour drive there and back was the spiritual imprimatur stamped on this shopaholic's paradise by virtue of its ownership by the Church of England.

At Gateshead the church has responded to Sunday trading by laying on Sunday services for the shoppers visiting the ten-screen cinema, 28-lane bowling centre, Marks & Spencer, House of Fraser, the "antique village" and dozens of clothes shops.

Having invested heavily in the 1980s property boom and subsequently lost millions, the church has decided to sell the centre, its biggest and most profitable commercial asset. The Church Commissioners, who manage the church's £2.5 billion assets, could make £500 million from the sale.

Half an hour before the service began, exhausted shoppers, mainly children and pensioners, had seated themselves in the chairs placed ready, more as if relieved to find a seat than grateful for such a spiritual oasis. After a few warm-up verses the band, with guitars and electric organ, struck up. "We want to see Jesus lifted high," they sang, while simultaneously behind them rose a glass lift taking its captive occupants to the first floor. "Strongholds come tumbling down," they continued, as the lift descended in a strange coincidence that made me wonder whether the whole affair wasn't God's little joke on commerce and the Church of England.

RICHARD RAYNER

Exhausted shoppers join in hymns and listen to the band

The Rev Lyn Jamieson, MetroCentre chaplain, is one of 1,500 Anglican chaplains, of which 49 are in industry. In between ministering to the centre's staff and customers, she invites a different priest or minister to take the monthly service, and ours was led by the Rev Bob Hopper, vicar of All Saints Lobley Hill nearby. "Lord, we thank you for everyone who is here," he said. "We thank you specially for those who are just passing by and stopped to listen. Lord, we pray that you will make your presence known and felt here through the power of your spirit."

Shoppers weighed down with goods in plastic bags began to queue around the balconies and chairs, and within a few minutes there was standing room only. Few passed by without stopping to listen or join in some of the hymns projected onto a large screen. Many, clearly non-churchgoers, were fascinated, but seemed uncertain whether the service was an entertainment to be enjoyed or a sales pitch for some commodity.

"Jesus I need you deep down in my heart," we sang next, while I wondered about the things I wanted but arguably did not need. We heard a personal testimony from Doris, an elderly member of the congregation, on how much she loved the new styles of evangelical music which are usurping more traditional hymns in churches throughout Britain. There was a reading from St Paul's letter to the Corinthians, where he calls on Christians to clothe themselves in kindness, humility and gentleness, but says nothing about buying a new dress. Our prayers were led by a young woman, Susan. "Lord, there may be people walking round with nothing in their lives," she said. "We pray that you will reach out and touch them." After another hour walking through the centre, when I discovered a perverse pleasure in looking at all the things I did not want, I resolved, just for one day, no more to lay up treasures upon the earth.

Sunday Shoppers' Service, 3pm at the MetroCentre, Gateshead, Tyne and Wear, NE11 9XX (0191 493 2046).

CHAPLAIN: The Rev Lyn Jamieson.

ARCHITECTURE: Glittering cathedral to mammon, the cross scarcely evident save in the faces of tired shoppers. ★★

SERMON: Worship leader argued for modernity. "We have a big heart for people everywhere, we also have a heart for the Church, particularly those bits of the Church that are stuck somewhere in the 16th century." ★

MUSIC: Seemingly endless series of sugary sing-along evangelical songs, a shopping centre being the best-possible setting for this ecclesiastical equivalent of "muzak". ★★★

LITURGY: Like a spiritual DJ, worship leader ad-libbed between the songs, an effective style in this context. ★

AFTER-SERVICE CARE: Tried but could not find a single thing to buy, so abandoned shopping and resorted instead to the chaplain's proffered cup of tea, cakes and solicitous concern. ★★★★

SPIRITUAL HIGH: Brave attempt to serve both God and mammon. ★★★

❛ Advani had carried out root canal surgery on me. I was haunted by the memory of those bare hands ❜

along with thousands of other women who have had babies in the last five years) we cannot be told.

Angry hoots from a black cab, whose bumper I had narrowly missed, brought me back to the present and I tried to concentrate on driving. Heaven knows the original purpose of the journey — now all I wanted was to get back to my nest. The children were home from school (broken boiler) demanding to know what I was doing there — was it the weekend? The children's nanny looked puzzled, but I could think of nothing to say except "hello", and went to find the helpline number.

A BBC switchboard operator found it. A man answered and asked a few questions. In an unreasoned panic I refused to give my name.

"Have you got your letter with your patient number?"

"No, but I was treated by him."

I was put on hold and put through to someone else who asked me the same questions, and then I remembered that I had left too early to have seen that morning's post. A letter, postmarked Kensington & Chelsea & Westminster Health Authority lay on the stairs, a rubber-stamped "confidential" barely legible on the brown envelope so similar to the dozens that tip through my letter box each week.

My "unique patient number" was an open-sesame: I was put through to a counsellor from the Terrence Higgins Trust. He said that there was little chance of infection, and he was informative and reassuring.

"Was this a revenge thing?" I asked.

For the first and only time he was put off his beat and, finally demurred: "No, of course not." He told me there was no proven case in this country of a health worker infecting a patient with HIV.

"What are you most worried about?" he asked.

"My children."

"Have they had any serious illness since they were born?"

"No."

"Then they are fine."

"All the same, I want an HIV test."

"The clinic at the Royal Free hospital is probably the most convenient for you — and unlike some of the clinics they give same-day results." And he explained that we would have to have a counselling session, without which we would not be able to have HIV tests.

"Good — today then."

"No — they won't be able to test you until Thursday."

That was two days away. But it seemed there was little choice. "Can I book an appointment for my husband, too? Can we have a joint appointment?"

"No."

"Why not?" Muffled conversation in the background. The reason that counselling is normally done one to one is so that the individual can, without inhibitions, tell the counsellor about their sexual activity in and outside a marriage or relationship.

At last he agreed and arranged a time for the joint counselling session. Then I rang my husband. Having to break the news to him drove home the fear that all our family might be infected. And then there was the media. My lot — I am a journalist on The Times. Every time I turned on the radio, every news broadcast included this ghastly item. The papers carried reports about Advani, too. Some included the news that David Acer, a Florida health worker, may have infected up to five patients with HIV, a news story I had managed to forget. He was a dentist.

There was a day to go before the test. I went to work on autopilot and, that evening, had supper with a friend and drank far, far too much.

I had told one person at The Times what was going on. And I kept wondering whether to tell my colleagues if I was found to be HIV-positive.

At 9.20 on Thursday morning, my husband and I arrived at the Ian Charleson day centre at the back of the Royal Free hospital in London. It was an oasis — a comfortable, well-furnished waiting area and a staff of friendly people. Two other couples, one, with a baby, looking as terrified as we must have done. The other, a little older than us, expensively dressed and looking — happy. I admired their sang-froid. There were a number of single men and, on the walls, posters about safe sex, bereavement counselling and funeral services. I lurked behind a copy of The Times, not reading a word but wanting a shield from this alien world.

Our counsellor arrived and took us into a dusty room, in the main hospital, furnished with a few Formica tables and assorted chairs. She was young, beautiful and sweet-natured, even when I snarled responses to the questions that she had to ask:

"How do you think you might feel if you are found to be HIV-positive?"

That one rendered me speechless.

"What do you think you would do if you were found to be infected?"

My husband, seeing steam rise from my ears, said: "I would go down to hell and give Advani's spit another turn. Do you understand? This man might have wiped out the whole of my family."

"Do you think you might have been infected?"

"Well, of course, otherwise I would not be here."

"How do you think you will react if you are not HIV-positive?"

"Thrilled — over the moon. Obviously."

"Here are some other ways that it is possible to be infected by the HIV virus," she listed them: infected blood or infected sexual fluid taken via mouth, anus, vagina or any break in the skin; sharing of needles with anyone who is infected with the HIV virus.

"Do you feel that there is any chance you could have been infected in this way?"

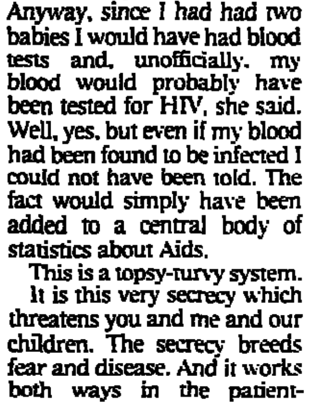
"No."

This is a sensible question. I can see that. If I were found to be HIV-positive the authorities would have to be absolutely sure of the disease's provenance. But it seemed, in the circumstances, an offensive question.

The counsellor was soothing and particularly anxious to assure confidentiality. The fact that I had been tested would appear nowhere, she said, not even on my dental records. Anyway, since I had had two babies I would have had blood tests and, unofficially, my blood would probably have been tested for HIV, she said. Well, yes, but even if my blood had been found to be infected I could not have been told. The fact would simply have been added to a central body of statistics about Aids.

This is a topsy-turvy system.

It is this very secrecy which threatens you and me and our children. The secrecy breeds fear and disease. And it works both ways in the patient-health worker partnership. According to a report in The Lancet in 1993, 60 health workers have been infected with HIV by patients. So why not ensure that health-care workers know if their patient has this devastating infection? Because, according to the Department of Health, a patient receiving medical care has the right to that care without being obliged to have an HIV test — and a health-care worker treating a patient has a right not to have the test unless he or she wishes to.



❛ Health-care workers have a right not to have the test unless they wish to. It is an ethical minefield ❜

And so we enter the ethical minefield of HIV.

In Australia, the first patient-to-patient infection was recorded when, in 1989, four women were given minor surgery on the same day as a man who later discovered that he was carrying the HIV virus.

The subsequent tribunal found that: "the only method of transmission is through the interchange of bodily fluids", and concluded that the most likely cause was the use of a multi-dose vial of local anaesthetic which became contaminated by a syringe used on the HIV-positive man. Shortly before the tribunal returned its decision, the New South Wales Health Department considered compulsory tests for HIV, Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C every six months for any health professional involved in surgical work. Professional bodies representing medical workers turned down the scheme although their own policy states that HIV-infected health workers should, voluntarily, not engage in "invasive procedures".

In the States, the Center for Disease Control endorses voluntary testing for HIV for health-care workers and patients before any surgery. It is not a fail-safe system because HIV does not necessarily show in the first few months after infection but it may be a step in the right direction.

In this country the British Medical Association insists that the emphasis should be on proper infection control rather than on testing. The Terrence Higgins Trust, too, is against any form of compulsory testing and gives three reasons: the fact that health workers can simply stick to the Royal College of Surgeons' guidelines in order to prevent infection; the infringement of civil liberties of people who may not even want to know that they are infected: and the high cost of such a measure.

Regular testing of health workers involved in surgery — say every six months — and testing of all patients about to have surgery would certainly be a huge and expensive task. But caring for an Aids sufferer until his or her death is an expensive task, too. The Department of Health estimates that every time it prevents an HIV infection it saves about £75,000 over the next ten to 15 years.

Health workers found to be HIV-positive could, surely, be found jobs within the health service that do not involve surgery.

Our counsellor tried to get us to think through the consequences of taking an HIV test. Were we absolutely certain that we both wanted to take a test? Yes — above all we wanted to be shot of this wretched uncertainty. Finally, she showed us back into the main clinic where we were to have our blood taken.

It was a freezing, sunny day. We had six hours before we could know the test results. The counsellor had told us to keep busy, to try not to dwell on it ... My husband and I, who never normally see each other during the day, went for a short walk on Hampstead Heath. Then I went to get my car fixed, still so thick-headed from the previous night's drinking I could not think properly — a boon in the circumstances. Whichever way the test goes, I decided, I have to take better care of my health. So I drove straight to a local bicycle shop and, in an act of uncharacteristic abandon, bought a mountain bike with a view to cycling the seven miles to work more often than I do at the moment on my 1940s bone-shaker.

And I promised myself what I have been promising myself for ages: that I would try to find some way of seeing more of my children.

By four o'clock we were back at the day centre. We were called back to our dusty room. We sat down and the counsellor told us that both our tests were negative. Neither of us was HIV-positive. My husband kissed the counsellor. She made us read each of our forms so that we could be in no doubt — the name, address and date of birth followed by the result: negative.

Euphoria.

We celebrated at a local tea shop. The happy couple from the day centre were there too, now looking even happier. We hailed each other. The man rose to speak to us.

"All clear?" he asked.

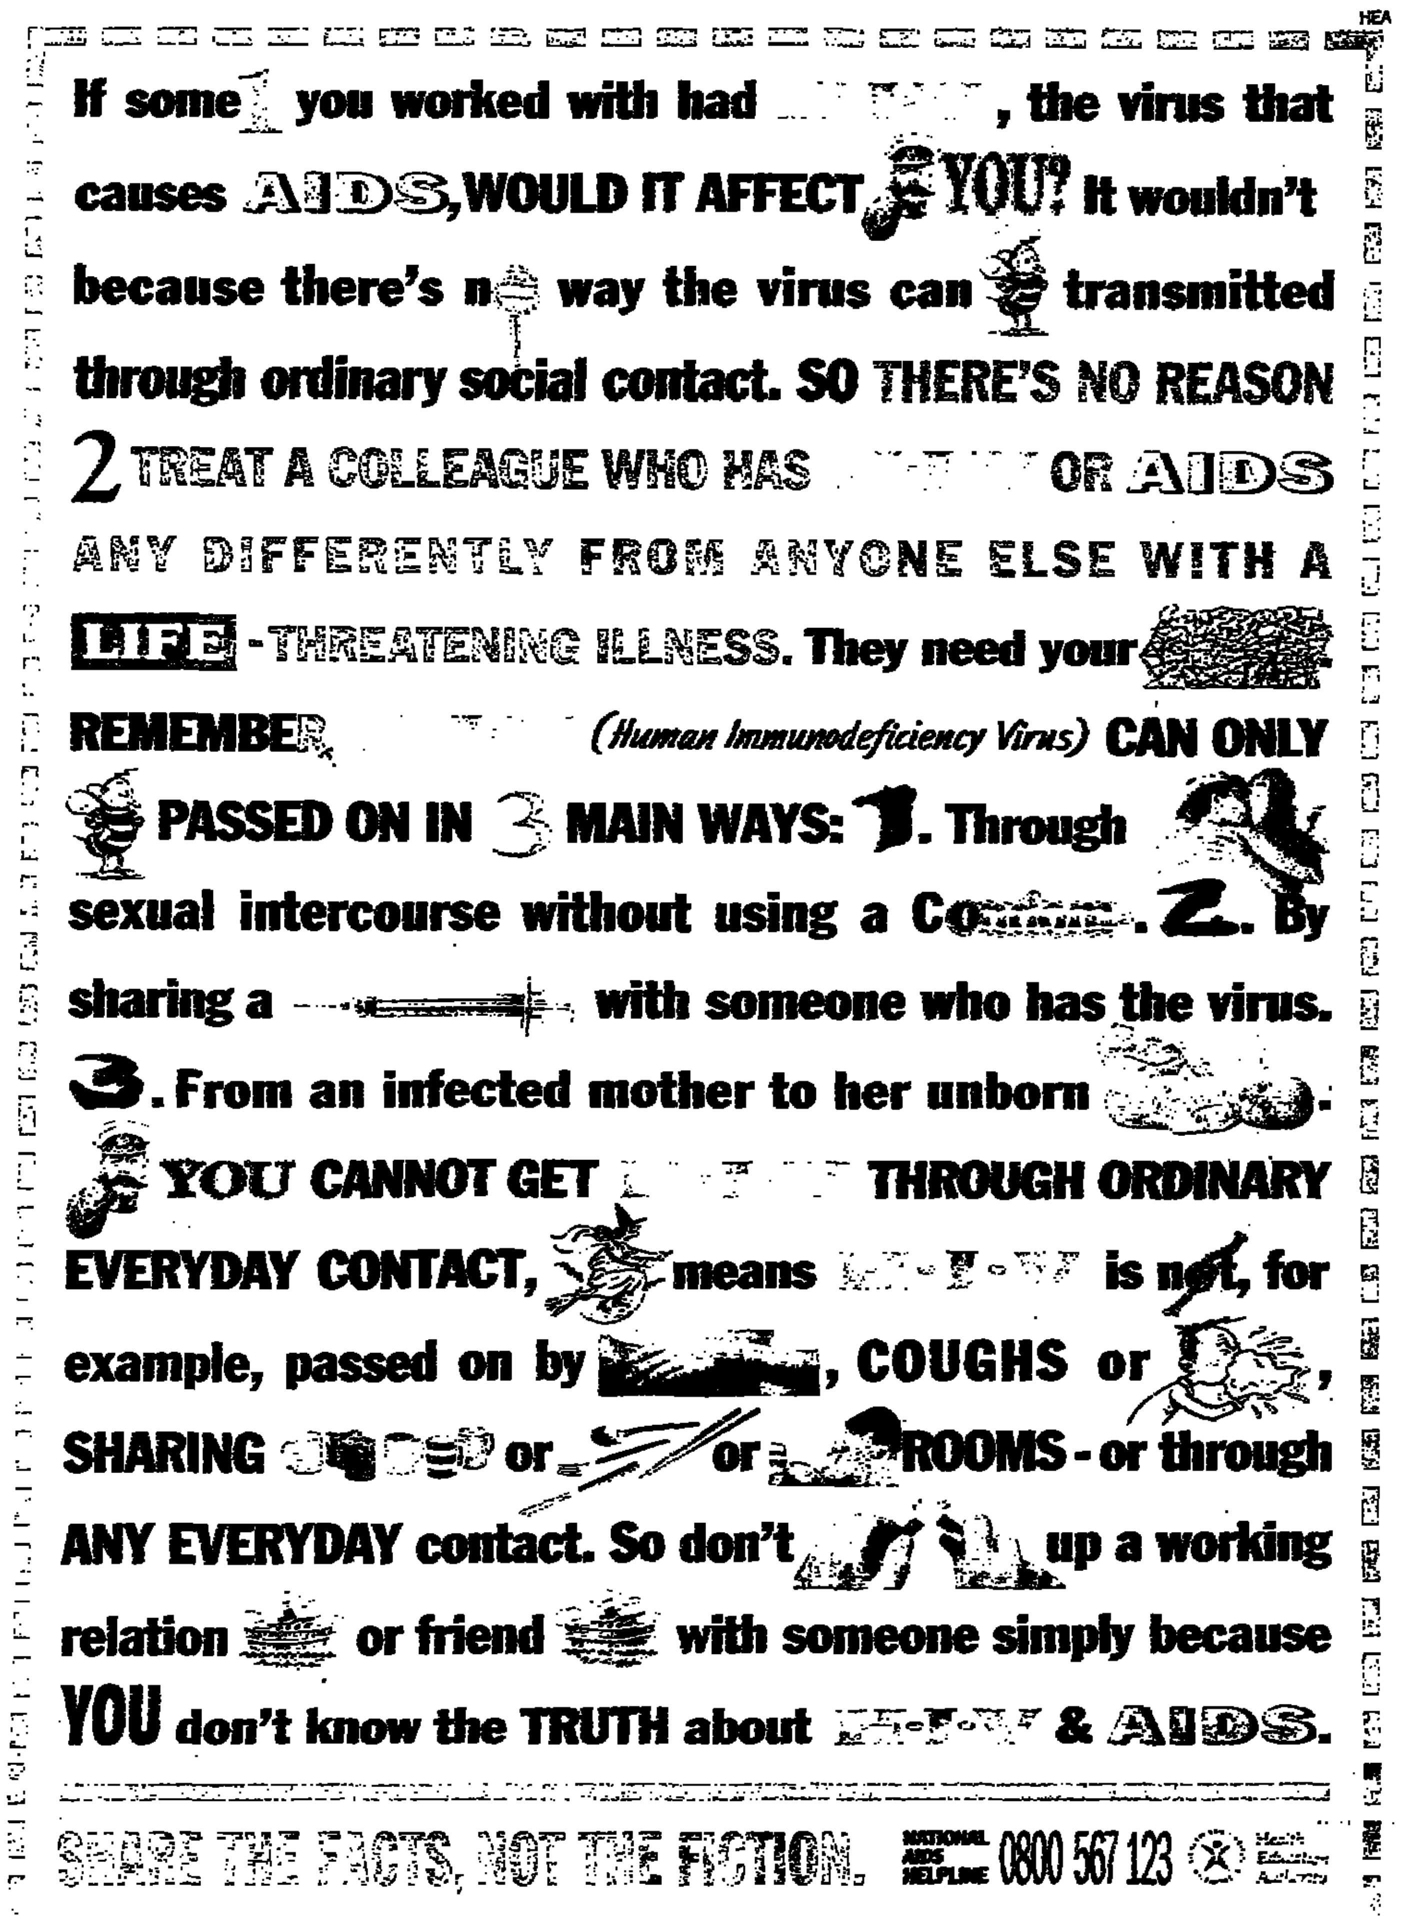
"Yes, so were you Advani's patients, too?"

He looked puzzled.

"The Aids dentist who died."

"No — we are embarking on a relationship. We are both clear." They beamed at each other.

This was a revelation. People like you and me testing for HIV for, well, social reasons. This is, surely, the kind of responsible behaviour the Government would applaud, a victory for some of the Aids campaigns it has run. And yet, when it comes to health care, of all areas of our lives, it is difficult to behave as responsibly — to take informed decisions. I never again want to go through what I have just experienced and yet I have no way of knowing whether a medical or dental adviser, who might in the future treat one of my family, is HIV-positive, although they themselves may know. And that cannot be right.



HEA

If some you worked with had , the virus that causes AIDS, WOULD IT AFFECT YOU? It wouldn't because there's n way the virus can transmitted through ordinary social contact. SO THERE'S NO REASON 2 TREAT A COLLEAGUE WHO HAS OR AIDS ANY DIFFERENTLY FROM ANYONE ELSE WITH A LIFE-THREATENING ILLNESS. They need your REMEMBER (Human Immunodeficiency Virus) CAN ONLY PASSED ON IN 3 MAIN WAYS: 1. Through sexual intercourse without using a Co . 2. By sharing a with someone who has the virus. 3. From an infected mother to her unborn . YOU CANNOT GET THROUGH ORDINARY EVERYDAY CONTACT, means is not, for example, passed on by , COUGHS or , SHARING or or ROOMS - or through ANY EVERYDAY contact. Poussin and Palladian private view and Chiswick House offer

THE creation of the 18th century classical villa of Chiswick House, one of London's finest period buildings, is celebrated in a major exhibition at the Royal Academy – and Times readers are invited to a private viewing on Monday, March 13.

Guests at The Palladian Revival: Lord Burlington and his house and garden at Chiswick will also see the exhibition Nicolas Poussin 1594-1665, which celebrates the 400th birthday of the father of French painting.

And, to mark the Palladian exhibition, English Heritage is offering two admissions for the price of one to readers who visit Chiswick House.

Invitations to the Royal Academy viewing, which cost £10 per person, include a glass of Mouton Cadet vintage Bordeaux wine from Baron Philippe de Rothschild, a free gallery guide and an exhibition poster normally sold for £4.95.

Three lecturers will be on hand during the evening to guide visitors and answer questions. The Palladian exhibition includes 120 original paintings, drawings and engravings of the house and gardens at Chiswick. It explores Lord Burlington's friendship with influential contemporary figures, including Alexander Pope and George Frederic Handel.

The 88 paintings in the Poussin exhibition have been assembled from private and public collections in western Europe, Russia and America. The exhibition opened in Paris last year and came to Britain in January.

The private viewing, from 6.30pm to 8.30pm, is expected to be highly popular and readers are recommended to apply promptly for invitations. Fill in the coupon below or telephone 071-226 7450 on weekdays between 9.30am and 6pm to make a reservation. Credit cards are not acceptable.

Admission to Chiswick House, in Burlington Lane, London W4, is £2.30 for adults, £1.70 for concessions and £1.15 for children. Readers who present the coupon (right) are entitled to two admissions for the price of one until April 2, 1995. The house is open from Wednesdays to Sundays between 10am and 4pm.

THE TIMES
This entitles the bearer and a companion to two admissions to Chiswick House for the price of one. Offer expires April 2, 1995.

The Lipizzaner Stallions are horses of nobility - the ultimate expression of an art form which dates back to the 16th century. These magnificent stallions perform acrobatic manoeuvres that no other breed of horse can equal. And now, they are here for all to appreciate and see on their "World Tour" direct from the U.S. Don't miss this rare chance to see them perform AIRS ABOVE THE GROUND®. They have, after all, been practicing for the last 400 years.

Ready for nights of pot and pimps?

WEEK IN THE ARTS

RICHARD MORRISON

I am getting a little worried about Michael Grade, the ebullient, red-braced boss of Channel 4. He seems obsessed by sex and drugs. He may also be obsessed by rock 'n' roll, but I have no evidence of that.

Tonight, for instance, he has turned his television station over to an eight-hour glorification of pot culture. No, ma'am, I don't mean pots as in Etruscan vases — fascinating though a discussion of classical ceramics would be. I mean pot as in cannabis, joints, hashish, dope, grass, marijuana, and if-you-remember-the-Sixties-you-weren't-really-there-man.

We start at 8pm with a documentary about the history of cannabis — presumably to catch the under-12s before bedtime. At 9.05pm there is a programme about the "medicinal" benefits of pot. No, really, drug addiction is terribly good for you. Everybody in Hampstead says so.

Then follows a "comic" tour of Amsterdam's drug scene; a demonstration of how to use hashish in cooking; a "counter-culture classic charting the drug-laden mad misadventures of stoned rock musicians" — and so on to 4.15am. If you can remember it tomorrow, you weren't really watching.

Having celebrated illegal substances tonight, Mr Grade and his merry chums spend the next eight Saturday nights transmitting the biggest load of filth ever seen on British TV. The Red Light Zone is apparently "an exciting new area of late-night programming focusing on sex, the sex industries and sexual tourism". A glimpse at the programme titles will give you the flavour: Strippers; Drag King; Ladyboys; Hookers, Hustlers, Pimps and Their Johns; Readers' Wives; The Bar Girl, The Catholic, The Pimp and The Priest; Gender Bender; El Porno and (my own favourite) The Match that Started My Fire.

No doubt Channel 4's ratings will soar. One thing bothers me, however. Only a few weeks ago, Mr Grade was ranting about the iniquity of Channel 4's high-minded broadcasters having to subsidise the ratings-obsessed profiteers at ITV to the tune of £50 million a year. He won a lot of sympathy for his case, too. But how do these nights of drugs and pimps fit into his "high-quality broadcasting" agenda? I may watch for a while tonight to find out. But I won't inhale, officer.

Meanwhile, those whose mission is to popularise high culture will surely be intrigued by the news that The Sun has started its own arts page. Admittedly, the page is only sporadic at present: twice in a month, so far. But when it does appear — well, phew what a scorcher.

I claim a little credit for its evolution. A month ago I was phoned by a man from The Sun. "Hi, I'm Chris from The Sun," he said with a friendly chuckle. "Tell me about Paganini. Didn't he write the South Bank Show tune?"

I said yes, the South Bank Show tune is Andrew Lloyd Webber's arrangement of a tune by Paganini. And I looked up a few biographical details of the virtuoso violinist. "Brilliant," said my new-found friend.

Imagine my surprise, as they say in these parts, when I opened The Sun next day and saw a photo-spread of Vanessa-Mae Nicholson — the exotic London teenager who is being marketed as the "next great violinist" by the once-proud record company EMI. Ms Nicholson's costumes and poses need not concern us here. Suffice it to say that they would not suit Lord Menuhin.

But it was the headline that brought a cry of proprietorial pride to my lips. "The Teeny Paganini!" it shrieked. And in case this reference proved too erudite for its readers, The Sun added a little footnote relaying my potted biography of Paganini, almost word for word. I am still waiting for my consultancy fee, which I anticipate will run to four figures.

After this foray into high-brow music, The Sun has grown bolder. This week, it offered a critique of Tom Stoppard's new play, Indian Ink. Well, perhaps critique is the wrong word. In the play, Felicity Kendal appears naked — strictly in the cause of dramatic truth, of course. The episode lasts all of 45 seconds, and Ms Kendal is artfully arranged behind a mosquito net. Nevertheless, for men of a certain age, this is pulse-quickening stuff.

Naturally, no photographs exist of this exciting moment. The Sun, undeterred, has "mocked up" a nude photograph using Ms Kendal's head and another woman's body. "Felicity," the paper chortles, "proved that she had the best seat in the house at the Aldwych Theatre." A pun that Maestro Stoppard himself might be proud to invent!

There has not been this much tabloid interest in serious culture since that sporting American operatic diva, Maria Ewing, brought the Dance of the Seven Veils to a stunning full-frontal conclusion in Salome a few years back. The Royal Opera publicist of that era — a lady of, shall we say, somewhat constrained social horizons — seemed utterly taken aback by the reaction to that spectacular event. "The most peculiar sort of periodicals are asking for tickets," she sniffed.

Ah, innocent days! Now the scramble for audiences is so desperate in the arts world that the attention of the tabloids, for whatever reason, is not only tolerated but warmly welcomed. Or as the intrepid Ms Kendal put it this week: "You'd be selling it short if you started being coy." Quite.

CONCERT

Jaw jaw instead of more, more

ONE day — soon, I hope — we shall learn that the best programme notes are the silent ones, or even the invisible ones. Not content to leap out from every page of the programme, information is now pressed into earphones and poured out of the mouths of conductors, presenters and pre-concert talkers. Our listening is in danger of becoming over-directed.

It was perhaps in reaction to this that the sizeable audience for New Voices from the New World (a programme of American chamber and vocal music from Ruggles to Rodgers and Hammerstein) declared noisily that enough was enough by handclapping Wilfrid Mellers to silence.

Capricorn/White
Purcell Room

He had exceeded his brief by expanding a few words of introduction into a 40-minute survey of American music from sea to shining sea, while the Capricorn Ensemble waited anxiously in the wings. Mellers's enthusiasm for his subject is legendary, but this was neither the time nor the place.

The programme, too, was ill-sorted. A first half including knotty Nancarrow (the testing Sonatina, superbly played by Catherine Edwards), Lou Harrison's tough, Schoenbergian String Trio, and Carl Ruggles's massive Evocations for Piano is indigestible at the best of times. Five of Copland's more ingenuous songs failed to provide quite the right sort of relief. Despite Willard White's eloquent prformances, they came as something of an anticlimax.

There was plenty of time, during Capricorn's painstakingly sensitive performance of John Cage's String Quartet in Four Parts, to ponder on the composer's words: "My favourite music is the music I haven't yet heard." Intense, spare fragments of song, rocking lullaby and static meditation were tuned austerely one to the other through the voices of each instrument.

The astringency of Julian Grant's arrangement for chamber ensemble of Oh What a Beautiful Morning tuned the ear cunningly from Cage to Cole Porter and Rodgers and Hart, through to White's concluding performance of It's a Great Night for Singing. Well, perhaps just a goodish one...

HILARY FINCH

THEATRE: Benedict Nightingale on a valiant Joe Orton revival

DONALD COOPER

Farce with a cold heart: Richard Wilson as Dr Rance, Debra Gillet as Geraldine Barclay in What the Butler Saw

Funny how the laughs dry up

What the Butler Saw
Lyttelton

This was the madcap farce that Joe Orton had just finished when his lover killed him with a hammer in 1967, and it is the one his admirers regard as his masterpiece. As a Loot man myself, I have always found that view puzzling, and I still do, even after seeing Richard Wilson and John Alderton run themselves ragged at the National. When production after production fails to generate the expected quota of laughter — and Phyllida Lloyd's revival is my fourth go at the piece — it is time to ask questions of myself, Orton, or both.

Has it been a failure of performance? That was certainly the case when Ralph Richardson played the role of Rance, loony inspector of Her Majesty's loony-bins, in 1969. He thought the play nasty, persistently pronounced the word "nymphomania" as "nymphromania" in protest, fluffed lots of lines, and by opening-night was doing little but bay and wail in a stricken manner, as if the Hound of the Baskervilles had wandered into Feydeau. The audience hated the play ("Gallery Boos Dead Playwright") and even barracked Sir Ralph ("give back your knighthood"). The farce was a farce.

But subsequent revivals, not least this, have been stronger, so we must look for other explanations. Could the problem be the plot? A shrink called Prentice (here, Alderton) tries to hide the girl he wants to seduce (Debra Gillett), first from his wife (Nicola Pagett), then from Rance (Wilson). There follow increasingly elaborate subterfuges involving a criminal hotel porter, a policeman and others. But these have no real logic to them because nobody onstage is shockable. You have to feel the power of respectability if you are to laugh when people desperately try to hide misdeeds — and how can you do so when Pagett's Mrs Prentice is gamely proclaiming her nymphomania and, as it turns out, taking her husband's infidelities in her stride?

Farce cannot easily breathe in a permissive atmosphere. Nor, perhaps, can it flourish in a wordy one. The best of What the Butler Saw, as Lloyd's production confirms, is its subversive, neo-Wildean wit: "You were born with your legs apart, they'll send you to your grave in a Y-shaped coffin", that sort of thing. But imagine trying simultaneously to listen to The Importance of Being Earnest — one of the play's influences, incidentally — and fall about at Ray Cooney's latest. Orton puts an audience in a similar bind. It was noticeable at the National that what began as gales of laughter ended as blustery gusts.

Wilson exploits that bony, scowling face and prim, glowering voice of his. Alderton begins as the smug, suave consultant, and ends looking like a crash-victim in Casualty. Pagett struts bossily about in a bulbous 1960s wig. But all their energy and finesse left me feeling that the play's main interest is the insight it gives into Orton's mind. The sane act mad, the rational irrationally. Men dress as women and vice versa. You can see the play dates from the time of the emergence of alternative psychiatry and gay lib. You can feel Orton, the homosexual anarchist, everywhere.

Lloyd's production reaches its climax, more forthrightly than most, with gunshots, blood and chaos. That, too, has its personal echoes, for Orton added it at a time when his relationship with Kenneth Halliwell, his murderer, was deteriorating into violence and madness. It is not very funny, and not meant to be. Could another reason the play refuses to be hilarious be that it is too autobiographical?

GREAT BRITISH HOPES

Rising stars in the arts firmament

JAMES PUREFOY

Profession: Actor

Age: 30

What's he been in? Matthew Warchus's Death of A Salesman; Katie Mitchell's Women Of Troy; Tom Conti's Present Laughter, or "Absent Laughter" as he jokily calls it. He was originally snapped up by the RSC as a student at Central.

What happened in between? "My career took a strange left turn when I did Coasting, a television dromedy (drama-comedy) in 1990," Purefoy says. "The strange nether world of Light Ent. It's only in the past three years that I've been able to steer back to what I want to do."

What is he in at the moment? He is Tony, the young aristocrat taken over by his butler, in The Servant at the Birmingham Rep. Purefoy gives an outstanding performance — dapper, comic, savage, pitiable — transforming from a strapping chap into a shuffling alcoholic wreck.

London appearance: He looks distinctly dashing on a rainy afternoon, arriving at his local café like the hero of a Merchant Ivory film in creamy linen.

What happens next? Come the summer, he will be everybody's Merchant Ivory hero: a cavalry corporal in The Feast Of July, an adaptation of H. E. Bates's novel. However, he says: "This is a very different Merchant Ivory film. It's about working-class people in a small town in Somerset," the county where he grew up. He has also been in Yalta, filming the Napoleonic drama Sharpe's Sword for Central Television. The cavalier Crimean chauffeurs had to be breathalysed every morning before the drive across the mountains. "Cracking," says Purefoy in a humorous blend of the laddish, the throwaway and the enthused.

More reckless driving: He was expelled from Sherborne — very happily — for taking a combine harvester for a haywire spin. The Absurd Adventures of Purefoy do not stop there. He tells of "running like buggery up Brewer Street, a pinball pursued by an absolute pitbull," then being beaten up by a Jehovah's Witness, crying with laughter because he could not believe it.

More seriously: "The only way theatre will survive is if it's really good, if it gets inside people's hearts and minds. I care about that passionately," he says earnestly. "The one place I get truly angry is in a theatre when something's badly done. And when I'm bad, it makes me more depressed than anything I've experienced."

THE SUNDAY TIMES
Zoe Heller in New York
❛In the evening a man whom I'd met at a dinner party 10 days before rang and invited me out for a drink. I knew this man was not for me — he wears strings of beads and red jeans and I think, though I can't be sure, he had eyeliner on when I met him. Still, he's very handsome and I figured seeing another man — even a dweeb in beads — would be good for me...❜

NEW ON VIDEO: A masked marauder; Altman's mosaic; all about Glenn Gould

Eye-boggling comedy: Jim Carrey in The Mask, which perfectly captures the madcap energy of 1940s cartoons

■ THE MASK

Entertainment Video.
PG, 1994

RUBBER-faced comic Jim Carrey gets his best screen vehicle so far in this Jekyll and Hyde affair about a mild bank official who unleashes the beast within when he dons a wooden mask. Helped by computer-generated special effects, Carrey leaps round the screen, changing shape almost as often as the genie in Aladdin. No other live-action film has captured so well the madcap energy of 1940s cartoons. A strong supporting company includes Peter Riegert, supermodel Cameron Diaz and a wonderful performing dog called Max.

■ DRACULA PRINCE OF DARKNESS

Lumiere, 15, 1965

"MY master's hospitality is renowned," mutters the sepulchral servant, Klove, welcoming British tourists to Castle Dracula. Christopher Lee's Count arrives rather late, in the form of a box of ashes. But after a few pints of Charles Tingwell's blood, he is soon back in working order, red-eyed, fangs at the ready. No dialogue, though, just a few snake-like hisses. Chirpy Francis Matthews leads the band of Brits, but it is Barbara Shelley who haunts the mind as the party's vampirised Victorian wife. In the original widescreen ratio, essential for the full Hammer horror effect.

■ A WOMAN OR TWO

Arrow, 15, 1985

THE only film in history to star Gérard Depardieu, a French-speaking Sigourney Weaver and Dr Ruth Westheimer, American television's diminutive sex counsellor. As such, the romantic comedy has some curio value; it may also cause laughter if you are feeling very indulgent. But put this contrived tale of a bashful archaeologist, an advertising executive and the fossilised remains of the first French woman alongside a classic such as Bringing Up Baby and it withers away. Routine direction by Daniel Vigne, best known for The Return of Martin Guerre.

■ SHORT CUTS

Artificial Eye, 18, 1993

ROBERT ALTMAN at full throttle, weaving 22 characters and ten or so plots into a compelling portrait of lives on the edge in Los Angeles. Raymond Carver's source stories do not emerge unscathed: Altman's collage-effect loses some of their simplicity. But the mosaic structure generates its own kind of power, and superb acting from Andie MacDowell, Bruce Davison, Tim Robbins and company carries the enthralled viewer from vignette to vignette. Previously a rental release: now available to buy in the original widescreen format.

■ 32 SHORT FILMS ABOUT GLENN GOULD

Electric, U, 1993

ECCENTRIC style meets eccentric subject in Francois Girard's wonderful portrait of the iconoclastic pianist who shunned concert platforms for the recording studio for the last 20 years of his life. The 32 vignettes (echoing Bach's 32 Goldberg Variations) dissect the musician's contradictions. Colm Feore's persuasive impersonation of Gould jostles with reminiscences from colleagues and little abstract films. There is much humour, and even more great music. A joyful experience.

■ TRUE LIES

CIC, 15, 1994

IN which superspy Arnold Schwarzenegger bashes heads, torches châteaux, flies Harrier jets and saves the world from the terrorist group Crimson Jihad: high-budget mayhem staged with aplomb by director James Cameron. The nudge-nudge silliness that infected Last Action Hero is still present, though the film's principal fault is the laborious, unfunny domestic comedy that fills out the middle and demeans Jamie Lee Curtis (playing Schwarzenegger's wife).

GEOFF BROWN

Wham, bam, thank you, Mao

In China, rock-starved youth are taking up fake Fenders and an attitude from 1976

There is more to Chinese counter-culture than a takeaway. The proof is The Beijing Bastards, an unambiguous title for a season of new Chinese cinema at the ICA.

Like the movie from which the season takes its name, these films are a nasty shock for anyone who thinks of Chinese youth as photogenic lasses looking after their blind grandmothers. Lovers and friends, let alone disabled relatives, get brutally short shrift from the maximum R & B kids of this generation.

It is not surprising that these films, and the music they feature, have been banned. But their milieu is both far more outrageous than one would have imagined yet reassuringly familiar. This is 1976, the Sex Pistols and the Clash all over again, but this time chanting: "Will I scrub you to death, or you'll break first? I want to play heavily. Oh! Play heavily." Much harder in Mandarin than "No future".

The music has emerged from the Beijing Academy of Fine Art, whose long, canvas-stacked corridors are at the centre of The Days, the story of a couple of young teachers, played by real-life famous artists. They and their paint-smeared studio reappear in Beijing Bastards.

Everyone in Beijing under 35 is trying to sell a painting to an American or cut a deal with a Hong Kong label. Everybody wastes time at public telephones, hoping for promised dollars from Hong Kong, phoning New York for potential deals, waiting for the same Big One that every hoodlum with a guitar has been looking for since 1956.

ROCK IN CHINA

"We're all social outsiders. We all do exactly what we like," one character mutters, chain-smoking through rehearsals in an underlit club. This is how rock has been and should remain, frozen in the dirty aspic of oriental appropriation, a souvenir of itself.

Beijing Bastards features Cui Jian, China's biggest rock star, not banned, merely discouraged from playing too many concerts for too many people. He is as famous as Jagger but with an official status more akin to Johnny Rotten when God Save the Queen reached No 1 despite a BBC ban.

Watching his band perform, I found it difficult to grasp the magic. The ponderous riffs and creaky moves do not immediately inspire the throwing of underwear. It seems like pleasantly quaint pub-rock, and the mosh is the Politesse Pogo, a neighbourly bounce.

Rather more thrilling is He Yong, whose hit Bell & Drum Tower wafts through Beijing Bastards. A demented mélange of Iggy Pop and Fu Manchu, he races on stage, long hair over his face, screeching from the nicotine canyon of his lungs: "I have big lumps and small lumps on my head — some were made by others, some by me."

For Beijing rockers the formative experiences were Wham! and Live Aid. When Wham! played China in 1985, they were a revelation of biblical proportions. Live Aid was the first pop event to be circulated by video cassette. "There was an Icelandic group not long ago." He Yong admits.

The roots of Chinese rock are as patchy as a roadie's bomber jacket. In the early 1970s, teenagers gathered clandestinely to play guitar "rebel music" in parks. They had probably heard of the Beatles but, even today, many people have not heard of Elvis.

Bands such as the Face, Yellow People or the influential Black Panthers were based around whatever tapes were in circulation, donated by tourists and friends abroad. Ghastly acts such as Didi or Tang Dynasty demonstrate that bad taste is universal.

The hard world of Beijing Bastards — of bad beer, fake Fenders and absolute cynicism — is not about communism but what it means to be Chinese. Rejecting all clichés of Chinese culture, these desperadoes are not afraid to embrace a few of ours, creating a parallel universe of hip rebellion instantly recognisable yet impossibly exotic.

THE TIMES
THE THEATRE CLUB

WHAT would have happened if Nazi Germany had successfully invaded Britain? The great Noël Coward provided at least one answer with the moving Peace in our Time. The play is set in a London pub and follows the lives of ordinary people under enemy occupation as they demonstrate the mixture of obstinacy, independence and humour that Coward defined as London pride. Peace in our Time has been revived to mark the fiftieth anniversary of VE day and is now on tour:

■ ANNIE LENNOX
Medusa
RCA/BMG 74321257172★

TO judge by the slew of old songs that are currently being rehashed by contemporary acts, pop has reached a stage roughly comparable to that of jazz after 1955. Following a 30-year period of intense innovation, there is now a vast stock of songs that have proved themselves from which mainstream performers will increasingly draw to create "new" repertoires in response to shifts in popular taste.

In the wake of recent, similar albums by Luther Vandross and Gloria Estefan, Annie Lennox is the latest middle-of-the-road superstar to weigh in with a collection of old tunes selected, as she puts it, "more by instinct than design". With songs encompassing the obscure (her current hit, No More "I Love You's", was a minor success in 1986 for a group called the Lover Speaks) and the over-exposed (A Whiter Shade Of Pale), the album nevertheless covers the bases with shrewd precision and seems destined to be a colossal success.

But whatever its fate in the marketplace, as an artistic endeavour Medusa is a deeply flawed album. Lennox has an impressive range and a pleasing pop voice, but she irons out the emotion from a succession of soul songs, including Al Green's Take Me To The River, the Temptations' I Can't Get Next To You and Bob Marley's reggae classic Waiting In Vain, and completely misjudges Neil Young's Don't Let It Bring You Down, glibly skating over its lyric in a way which neutralises the plaintive appeal of the original.

On the plus side is a jazzy reworking of the Clash song Train In Vain, performed the way you suspect Mick Jones would have sung it himself if he had been blessed with any sort of a voice. But it is hardly enough to tip the balance sheet in the album's favour.

RELEASED on Monday, ten days before Red Nose Day, this year's Comic Relief single is, unfortunately, no joke. An excruciatingly naff "power ballad", complete with glutinous string section, mountainous chorus and a lyric too anodyne to flavour milk, it is a well-meaning disaster.

A minimum of 44p from the sale of each CD single goes to the Comic Relief charity organisation and, with this in mind, those of a generous disposition might feel inclined to buy a copy for the hilarious live recording of Can't Get Enough Of Your Love featuring Theophilus P. ■ CHRISTIAN McBRIDE
Gettin' To It
Verve 523989-2★★★

CRITICS asked to choose a dream team from the startlingly large pool of youthful talent in New York would be sorely tempted to put saxophonist Joshua Redman, trumpeter Roy Hargrove and pianist Cyrus Chestnut at the head of their list. That is precisely the stellar line-up to be found on the much-anticipated debut by Christian McBride, a phenomenally powerful double-bass player who is the heir apparent to those stalwarts, Milt Hinton and Ray Brown.

The line of succession is made explicit on Splanky, a Neal Hefti theme that has long been a staple of the Count Basie band's repertoire. Brown and Hinton join in on a three-way conversation which must count as the quirkiest version of the tune ever committed to record. McBride never once sounds overawed.

What is most encouraging about his work — like Redman's — is that it has remained open to so many different influences. The result is a collection that weaves together traces of Horace Silver-style hard bop and the more harmonically brittle compositions of Wayne Shorter. McBride freely acknowledges his debt to Frank Sinatra's A Swingin' Affair on Stars Fell on Alabama, while the title tune gets seriously funky à la James Brown. As both a performer and composer, McBride covers a good deal of ground without falling prey to self-conscious pastiche.

He does not make the mistake of pushing himself to the fore on every number, allowing Redman and Hargrove as much space as they need. Enough has been written about Redman already. Suffice it to say that his soloing grows leaner and more economical with each outing.

■ PURCELL
Music for Queen Mary
Westminster Abbey Choir/
New London Consort/Neary
Sony Arc of Light
SK 66243★★★

QUEEN Mary is having a good time on disc at the moment. Here is the latest offering, devoted to some of the music Henry Purcell, wrote for her coronation, birthday and funeral. It has added authenticity because it is sung by the present-day successors of the choir Purcell worked with and in the very place where he worked with it. What is not authentic, but unavoidable, is the hum of traffic outside Westminster Abbey picked up in the choral pieces. But the sense of space in the sound is lovely, while the director, Martin Neary, paces the performances well and his choir is in fine voice.

The disc flits easily between the public and private, the sacred and secular. After the opening vigorous coronation anthems, I was glad and Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem, we are offered two airs by John Blow composed in 1692 and 1694. The later one, The sullen years are past, is a particularly fine example of ground bass. But we are given all of Purcell's fine birthday ode of 1689, Now does the glorious day appear, a highlight of which is Michael Chance's exquisitely poised delivery of the beautiful countertenor aria, By beauteous softness mixt with majesty.

Purcell: sacred and secular

The new disc makes a point of recording the Funeral Sentences as they are now believed, thanks to Bruce Wood's researches, to have been performed at the time — with Purcell's simpler setting of Thou knowest, Lord inserted between Thomas Morley's I am the resurrection and I heard a voice. Wood has also concluded that military side drummers — not timpanists — played an anonymous "Old English March" to link the three marches specially composed by Purcell, James Paisible and Thomas Tollett.

Different contrast is provided by the two elegies O dive custos and Incassum, Lesbia — passionate, intense tributes sung beautifully by Emma Kirkby and Evelyn Tubb.

VC 5 455062 2★★★

THIS record presents the most private side of Purcell in 16 harmonically and contrapuntally amazing pieces that combine unashamed high intellectualism with modest deference to his forebears and sheer, finished beauty. It includes all ten four-part Fantasias (including one left incomplete), the three three-part Fantasias and one Fantasia "upon one note" (it is, too) in five parts, as well as the two In nomine settings.

Fretwork plays as any chamber ensemble should, acutely sensitive and intensely involved.

■ MOZART
Basset Horn Bon-Bons
Stadler Trio and friends
Philips 446 106-2★★

IF Mozart had been asked to write for a trio of basset hounds, I am sure he would have obliged; but, despite the canine artwork on this disc, the music is for the basset horn, an angular sort of alto clarinet much loved by the composer.

The Stadler Trio (members of Frans Brüggen's Orchestra of the 18th Century) has drawn together some of Mozart's most delectable writing for the instrument. Most of it is in the Hausmusik genre: cultivated, mellifluous, often witty pieces written for the private pleasure of chamber musicians and friends. The two Divertimenti (KV439b Nos 2 and 4) are typical. The first starts with the dying fall of the K488 Piano Concerto, but soon becomes deflected from anything too serious by a series of minuets and a rollicking rondo, while the second hints that the music of Idomeneo was brewing not too far away.

The clear honey of a clarinet joins the darker syrup of the basset horns for the Adagio in B flat. This separates two sets of three tiny Notturni for three basset horns and three human voices (Camille van Lunen, Myra Croese and Peter Dijkstra). These little Italian love ditties evoke the air of the great Terzetto from Cosi fan tutte, and balance perfectly the lustrous playing in this treat of a recital.

☐ FRANCAIX
Chamber Music
Marwood Ensemble/Haffner Ensemble
Collins Classics 14382★★

WOODWIND fanciers have another treat lying in store for them: two wind quintets and a cor anglais quartet of Jean Françaix, now 83 years old and still going strong. There is nothing here from the past prolific ten years of his output except the Second Wind Quintet with its longer thoughts, smoother contours and more abrasive mischief-making.

This is the late-flowering lust for life of a composer who vowed to take the place of Saint-Saëns and whose career, egged on by the encouragement of Ravel, really took off in the Paris of the 1930s. From this period, the Marwood Ensemble puts forward his String Trio and plays its pattern of scherzos with the same sophistication and urbane confidence with which it was written.

Between the two lip-cracking, lung-breaking yet easy-listening Wind Quintets is the 1970 cor anglais quartet, a jazzy harlequinade of short movements.

■ MACKENZIE
The Cricket on the Hearth Overture; Incidental Music to Twelfth Night and Coriolanus; Burns: Second Scottish Rhapsody; Benedictus
BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra/Brabbins
Hyperion CDA66764★★★

AS the man instrumental in setting up the Associated Board examinations, Sir Alexander Mackenzie has good cause to be remembered by generations of musicians. In fact Mackenzie (1847-1935) was almost as renowned in his lifetime as an administrator as a composer. This splendid disc, however, gives us a chance to reassess his talents.

His Scottish ancestry is heard best in Burns: Second Scottish Rhapsody, Op 24, which not only honours Scotland's greatest literary son, Robert Burns, but also uses the tune known as Bruce's March that for centuries symbolised Scottish nationalist aspirations.

Burns: nationalist symbol

Mackenzie's music for Twelfth Night and Coriolanus (in Elgarian vein) is of considerable interest, while the overture to The Cricket on the Hearth makes one curious to hear more of that operetta. The Benedictus, number three of Six Pieces for Violin, Op 37, is perhaps Mackenzie's best-known work, and his orchestral arrangement lends it an impassioned quality.

The performances, by the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra under Martyn Brabbins, are exemplary, giving Mackenzie's music the best possible opportunity to speak for itself.

☐ McEWEN
Solway Symphony; Hills o'Heather; Where the Wild Thyme Blows
London Philharmonic/
Mitchell
Chandos CHAN 9345★★★

A GOOD week for Scottish composers. Hard on the heels of the Mackenzie disc comes this equally valuable one of works by Sir John Blackwood McEwen (1868-1948). This is a follow-up to last year's Three Border Ballads, and it presents more music associated with the Border country: notably the Solway Symphony, McEwen's only large-scale symphonic work to receive repeated performances.

McEwen is the more unconventional composer. The Solway Symphony opens with an extraordinarily Brucknerian passage, and the influence of Sibelius is later evident, too. This is boisterous music and Alasdair Mitchell gives the London Philharmonic brass its head.

The other two pieces, performing editions by Mitchell of Hills o'Heather and Where the Wild Thyme Blows, show the more reflective side of the postwar McEwen, and receive aptly sensitive performances.

■ GILBERT AND SULLIVAN
HMS Pinafore
Evans/Palmer/Schade/
Suart/Allen/Welsh National Opera Orchestra/Mackerras
Conifer CD-80374 (1 CD)★★★

CONIFER has assembled for Pinafore a cast of the calibre that Sir Malcolm Sargent used to gather round him for the series of Gilbert and Sullivan recordings he made for EMI in the 1960s. Two rising young singers, Rebecca Evans and Michael Schade, sing Josephine and Ralph; the Martyn Green of our time, Richard Suart, is Sir Joseph Porter; and the saucy ship itself is manned by Thomas Allen, Richard Van Allan and Donald Adams, as experienced a crew as ever set sail. Felicity Palmer's robust Buttercup completes the line-up.

But pride of place goes to Sir Charles Mackerras, 70 this year, yet still conducting with the verve he brought decades ago to Pineapple Poll, the jaunty score he stitched together from Sullivan. Clearly he loves his composer still.

Conifer drops the spoken dialogue and goes for a single CD. Pinafore is one of the shorter pieces in the G & S canon, so the music is accommodated neatly and the diction is so good that only a few whiskery jokes are missing. And there are plenty of the latter still left in the songs themselves: Suart's little chortle at Sir Joseph's recollection that a "junior partnership" was the only ship he ever had seen is a joy. He will get on very well with the cut-glass Hebe of Valerie Seymour, the first cousin he ends up with. Allen brings the urbanity of his Covent Garden Don Alfonso to Captain Corcoran, especially in his Act II Song to the Moon. It is hard to imagine him being reduced to the ranks at the end.

Schade's keen lyric tenor serves him excellently as Ralph Rackstraw and it is no surprise, in this defiantly class-conscious piece, when he is destined for the upper deck. Evans's equally engaging soprano should have made her right for Josephine, but she does not sing with the ease of her colleagues. But nor did Elsie Morrison for Sargent: Josephine is not the easiest of roles. For fluency, turn to Adams's Dick Deadeye. He also sang the villain-informer on that Sargent set, which must make him the longest runner in the G & S business.

Van Allan leads the Welsh National Opera Chorus into the final verses in praise of being an Englishman with mighty fervour. Just as well the studios were in Swansea and not Cardiff Arms Park. So we shall give three cheers and one cheer more for this new recording of Pinafore.

Satisfying tasks for soggy days

George Plumptre, The Times Gardener, beats the rain with pruning and tidying

TONY WHITE

George Plumptre's Buddleia davidia has been pruned into neat domes of this year's leafy shoots above a cluster of thick, old branches at the base

Trying to garden during the past month has constantly reminded me of a passage in one of my children's editions of Winnie the Pooh. It starts raining on page 73 and is still raining on page 100. In a small garden like mine, the main problem has been walking anywhere on the lawn without making a quagmire. And for those of us who garden mainly at weekends it has been a question of hat, coat and boots and make the best of it.

I will worry about the pests and diseases that the wet, mild weather has fostered later in the year, when most of them rear their ugly heads. But, already, vine weevil is widespread in greenhouse pot plants, and a friend has caught so many mice that she is sure the weather has encouraged them to breed with gusto.

However, we have been promised future benefits. There has been enthusiastic media discussion about the aquifers, things I have not thought about since geography A level. We are reliably informed that they are full, which, with brimming reservoirs, means that whatever happens this summer we will be able to water the garden to our hearts' content.

In my garden, the main casualty has been some bulbs of pink, lily-flowered tulips planted in a tub whose drainage arrangement failed to perform. The tulips that I hope will give a mass display along the front of the house, have shown healthily above the ground. But with no similar signs of activity from my tub, I checked and found a sorry tale of saturation and rotted bulbs. Otherwise, the most serious damage is on the lawn, where a grassless bog is the result of goalmouth scrambles during the boys' games of football.

I am not normally a meticulously tidy person, but something about the weather has made me determined to keep on top of the shabbiness that has overwhelmed the garden. All my terracotta pots and tubs had become covered with muddy stains, so they have been scrubbed clean. So, too, have the brick and stone paths which, since the autumn, had grown extensive, slippery patches of moss.

The main thrust of my campaign has been concentrated on pruning, clearing the dead growth off perennials, and forking over compacted soil to let in air and encourage drainage.

I have finished pruning my shrub roses, whose freshly cut stems, with new growth just breaking, always look satisfying. More extreme treatment has been necessary for two old climbing roses against one boundary fence. Last year they produced half a dozen or so flowers about 10ft in the air above gaunt, bare stems. These have been pruned right back, leaving only four or five of the healthiest. Although they will take a year or two to regain their height, it will be as denser, evenly-flowering plants (I am encouraged by the success I achieved when I did the same to an old rose in our previous garden).

Similar untidiness had overtaken two plants of Buddleia davidia, so I have just pruned them back. Their bedraggled, sprawling shape has been replaced by neat domes of this year's leafy shoots above the cluster of thick, old branches at the base. Lavatera 'Barnsley', which any cold January or February wind makes shrivelled and ugly, has had the same treatment. Although the plant looks rather naked, it will not be long before the frame of pruned shoots is covered with new growth.

Alchemilla mollis and hardy geraniums are some of the perennials whose tufts of old, brown foliage have been clipped away. This reveals the tight clusters of new growth, which I think are one of the most encouraging sights of gardening in the spring. Similarly, the late-flowering Clematis viticella planted against a trellis pillar have had their brittle old stems cut right back to leave just two pairs of buds above the ground.

With other plants, discretion has got the better of my urge for tidiness. I have left the old stems on both Salvia uliginosa and the bushier plants of S. neurepia, as they would be susceptible to a sharp frost or cold snap. They will be trimmed back in a few weeks.

One of the best plants during the past few weeks has been Daphne odora 'aureomarginata'. Covered with clusters of pink-flushed white flowers, highlighted against evergreen leaves edged in creamy-white, its scent has filled several square yards of the garden even on the most rain-soaked days.

Equally rewarding has been a new addition since last year: a group of Iris reticulata — with bright blue or mauve flowers carried on short stems — which I planted towards the front of one border, along with some small daffodils (Narcissus cyclamineus).

The daffodil leaves are just emerging, but the deep purply-blue iris flowers, with their flashes of yellow, have introduced the warm, cheerful note that the last few weeks have demanded. When I bought them, I could not resist trying a plant of a new hybrid, I. histrioides 'George'. This has dark mauve, almost velvety-looking flowers compared with the better-known blue-flowered I. histrioides 'Major' that people normally recommend. 'George' is extremely smart and, with the reticulatas close by, has shown me that early-spring flowering irises are plants to grow more of in the future.

WEEKEND TIPS

- Prune buddleia (left) hard, removing all old shoots down to two or three buds.
- Divide and replant the corms of montbretias (Crocosmia x crocosmiiflora).
- Cut down late-summer flowering Clematis jackmanii and viticella to stems showing just two pairs of buds. Do the same with herbaceous varieties, such as C. integrifolia.
- Split the plants of perennial Lobelia cardinalis that were lifted in the autumn and brought in for protection over winter. The new plants can be put out in April.
- Plant shallots so that the tips of the bulbs just protrude on to the surface.

Think ahead if you want to create a special display of container plants

A bower on a balcony

One shopping trip in May, and anyone can have a balcony which is a riot of petunias, pelargoniums, lobelias, fuchsias and busy-lizzies. The trouble is, it will look like everyone else's. Yet it is not difficult to make container plantings more interesting and productive with a few carefully placed orders when the frosts are over.

If your balcony is dark, windy, cat-patrolled and north-facing, God help you. But if it is sunny at least half the day, and in a mild region, try tender and semi-hardy perennials and easy summer bulbs, looking always for a high proportion of flowers to leaves. Few of these plants appear at your average garden centre, so contact specialist nurseries and consult The Plant Finder.

I have discovered many unfamiliar and pretty plants, thanks to my curved London balcony, 25ft long but only 2ft 6ins wide. It is packed with pots whose inhabitants — unlike their owner — thrive in the city's foetid summer air. Winter days and nights below zero are the testing time. Wrapping pots in straw or insulating fibre is impractical and not, I suspect, really effective. Things must take their chance. But if you learn how to take summer cuttings, you will have young plants small enough to bring inside during a great freeze.

Investing in a few grandly proportioned clay pots gets a virgin balcony off to a good start. I prefer Far Eastern woodfired pots to chic, hand-thrown terracotta, and they can be a fraction of the cost. Unless you are an Atlas, treat big pots as a fixture: few things are more likely to wreck your back than struggling with heavy pots in a small space.

Essential techniques for balcony gardening are controlled watering (slow and thorough with a thumb half-over the spout), and potting plants on as they outgrow their pots. For younger plants, use John Innes general purpose, for mature ones use number three compost, with a generous pinch of bonemeal.

To avoid treading dirt into the carpet inadvertently, designate part of the balcony as a mess area for storing flowerpots and compost, plus seed compost or vermiculite if you mean to try propagation. Large bags save hassle, and a fortune if bought outside London: in Oxford, 60 litres of compost cost me £3.80.

To reduce watering, remember to incorporate wetted polymer crystals. Washed pea-grit sold in bags at builder's yards makes a neat surface on pots and cuts down water loss. Finally, you need a trowel, a bucket for mixing, and Phostrogen for weekly feeding in the growing season — simply dilute a teaspoon per two-gallon watering can.

In early spring, plants are at their most vulnerable and aphids can finish them off, so I watch like a lynx and use a hand-spray of ICI Rapid insecticide. Later in the season it is usually enough just to rub off aphids.

A warm balcony is ideal for choice herbs such as lemon verbena. Sowings of basil and rocket, made from May onwards, grow apace in a good summer. The neatest type of herb containers — an attractive alternative to the grow bag — are the wooden wine boxes in which serious wine-bibbers buy a dozen bottles at a time. If you are not in that league, try to sweet-talk a wine-merchant into parting with boxes.

For cheerful charm, no balcony plant offers more than the tender sage, Salvia grahamii. It starts to flower in May and drops the last of its small, bright scarlet flowers in October. Its bright green leaves are aromatic, and cuttings root easily. In an 18in pot, it makes an airy bush 3ft high and wide. Although wind regularly snaps its branches, S. grahamii (also sold as S. microphylla var. neurepia) will shoot back vigorously: one of mine has soldiered on for nine years. All tender salvias are worth exploring, with peach and raspberry shades appearing in the greggii hybrids.

Long-flowering, too, are neat, upright, pink Anisodontea capensis and the shrubby, sprawling, sticky-leaved mimuluses. Mimulus aurantiacus is one of my favourites, some 2ft wide and rather shorter, covered from late June to August with deep-throated, soft orange flowers. Tenderer with me are paprika-red M. aurantiacus var. puniceus and buff M. longiflorus. All are child's play from cuttings.

Convolvulus sabatius is a summer-long cascade of lilac funnels, though I find it hard to keep it through the winter. Other charming small-flowered sprawlers are rose-coloured, grey-leaved Sphaeralcea munroana and Malvastrum lateritium with its painted, apricot faces.

Blue notes come with ixiolirions for May, and, in July, the stately grace of agapanthus — unless you prefer them white or violet. Sparaxis (harlequin flower) is a charmer hardly ever seen these days. But for glamour, nothing surpasses a pot of lilies. However, unless you live in a "soft" water area, avoid late-flowering Asiatics which loathe lime. I stick to easy, compact, June-flowering lilies such as L. 'Connecticut King' and Olympic Hybrids.

For climbers, look for those that twine, and do not mind having warm roots — definitely not roses, clematis or honeysuckles. Eccremocarpus, the Chilean glory vine, is stunning, or try yellow Jasminum mesnyi and scented trachelospermum. Tender, dazzling white Solanum jasminoides flowered prettily for several years in one of my large pots until the house-painters crushed it.

Mitraria coccinea is an evergreen oddity, with dangling vermilion flowers. Said to need shade and hate lime, I found it thrived on London tap water until it outgrew its space.

Plan now — with an initial outlay of some £30 on half a dozen choice plants, petunias will soon be a thing of the past.

A reason to paint the sky

Make the most of your skyline with strong shapes and silhouetted grasses

You do not need to have a woodland garden to think about the skyline. If you are lucky enough to have a high bank or a steeply rising back garden that shows itself against the sky, then the skyline is yours for the planting. It can be made so much more varied than a skyline of trees because there are so many more varied shapes and densities among herbaceous plants. Beth Chatto is known for her mastery of wide herbaceous plantings, yet she is always keen to let them lead up into shrubs and trees and the open Essex sky. "Painting the sky" she calls it.

There are great advantages to having a small skyline to play with because some of the smaller plant shapes are so dramatic. After all, what trees can make fountain-like shapes on the skyline like grasses can? What plant can make neat spherical shapes like those of drum-stick alliums without any clipping?

Movement is another advantage of a smaller skyline. Most of the trees we can grow in this country do not sway much in the wind, unless it is very strong; herbaceous stems are much more flexible.

The skylines I play with are two large raised beds that stand two feet above the general level of the garden. Tall perennials planted there are completely silhouetted against the sky. There are some big clumps of Filipendula palmata which withstand all the wind can throw at them. The fat, bamboo-like stems sway together like commuters in a rush-hour tube, but none ever goes down, and the rather flat, fluffy heads of the flowers show off their structure all the better from below.

Plants which throw up individual flower spikes from a mound of basal foliage make excellent skyliners. I like to use francoa, which makes pink wands a yard long. Agapanthus is good too, especially the tall, broad-leaved varieties, although they are not as reliable in the ground as they are in pots. Alliums offer a range of drum heads in all shapes and sizes. Unfortunately, older plants cannot cope with wind, and they run to seed, so I cut them down after flowering. In less prominent positions, they will be good through into the autumn, as dried heads.

Best of all against the sky is the giant fennel, Ferula communis. From a mound of feathery leaves like a cut-leaved maple comes a stem 8ft tall or more, fat as a broom handle, which spreads a candelabrum of flower at the top. The stem grows with single-minded fury in two to three weeks, and is far too intent upon growing to be affected by any kind of wind.

Grasses make good skyline plants not just for their movement but for their transparency. The great Spanish oat, Stipa gigantea, produces a fairly unremarkable 30in bound of foliage, like a softer pampas grass. But its copper and gold flowers come months earlier than the pampas, in June or even late May. The flowers are thin enough to see through, and never still, except on the calmest of days. The open-textured flower head never looks better than when seen against the sky. With grasses, you could experiment for ever.

But some weight is required among all that lightness. Raised beds call for shrubs that look good when seen from below. Not for raised beds is the indeterminate base of weigela or philadelphus. Something is needed which not only covers itself right to the ground, but also has interesting sides. First prize in the side stakes goes to the shrubby elm, Ulmus 'Jacqueline Hillier'. Its dense branch structure has an equally dense twig structure in a series of overlapping dishes, like so many cupped hands. It is a delight, and just as happy in mixed plantings as in formal isolation, catching the eye and making you ask, "What could that be?". Once you know it, you will spot it at 50 yards.

Other well-furnished domes can be found in Salix lanata, Mahonia 'Undulata' (with a little encouragement), and Berberis verruculosa and calliantha, which have a white underside to the leaf.

GARDEN ANSWERS

STEPHEN ANDERTON
replies to readers' letters

Q I saw a documentary on the Prince of Wales's garden at Highgrove and decided that I, too, would have a wild flower garden under the trees in my little wood. Last summer I sprayed the ground elder and have subsequently dug the wood twice and applied tonnes of compost. Where can I purchase wildflower seed for a woodland planting? — Tony Purefoy, Weybridge, Surrey.

A I wish I had your faith that the ground elder was beaten after one season. I bet all that compost will kick-start the lingering pieces into life — be prepared to spray again before planting or sowing.

Grass seed can be bought with wildflowers included, or you can buy the flower seed separately. Most wildflower grass seed mixes vary according to soil type rather than to the suitability of light and shade. Choose a suitable mix from a large seed supplier such as British Seed Houses Limited, Bewsey Industrial Estate, Pitt Street, Warrington, Cheshire WA5 5LE (01925 654411). Many garden centres sell wildflower seed of individual species, and the seed list of the Hardy Plant Society (available to members only) is an invaluable source of suitable exotic woodlanders. Contact Pam Adams, Little Orchard, Great Comberton, Pershore, Hereford and Worcester WR10 3DP.

Q I am trying to tame ten acres of French woodland and meadow. Nettles and brambles are the main problems, the latter in impenetrable masses. Is there a weedkiller which would allow us to grass over the affected areas straight away? And how do we get rid of the brambles? — David Smith, Montjoie, France.

A Weedkiller containing glyphosate will solve your nettle problem, and allow you to sow grass almost immediately. I would tackle the brambles using a brushcutter (a metal rotating disk, like a strimmer) and a big bonfire. With the plants thus weakened, you could spray the young regrowth with a chemical brushwood-killer containing Triclopyr. With old established brambles it is almost as easy to cut off the tops and dig out the roots as it is to wait for them to succumb to sprays. Patience and a good spade can work wonders.

Q Every winter one of my garden borders gets covered with a layer of twiggy "hatch" a couple of inches deep, blown out of a row of cypress trees in my neighbour's garden. Can I use it as a mulch, compost it, or should I dig it in? — Mrs V. M. Whitley, Chester.

A Digging it in will achieve little, but as a surface mulch it could be very useful. Coarser pieces (three to six inches long) make a useful winter protection over tender plants. Finer pieces can be used as a mulch to conserve moisture under rhododendrons, azaleas and heathers. Better still, put it through the shredder if you have one, and this will produce an excellent fine mulch for any border, applied 1in-2in thick. Once shredded it stays put much better.

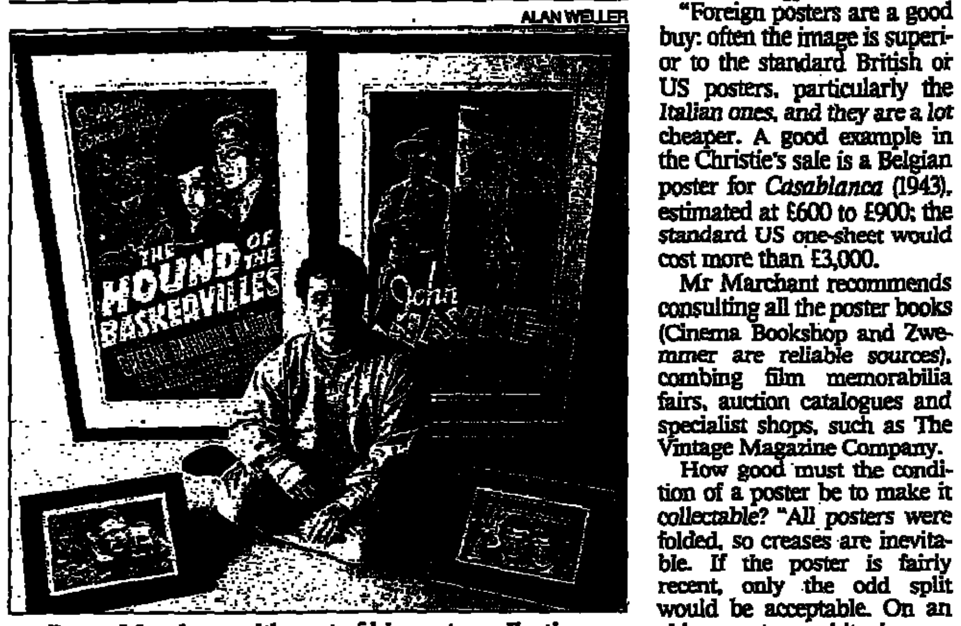
ALAN WELLER



Bruce Marchant with part of his poster collection

Film posters have been one of this century's most evocative and alluring methods of advertising. Next Thursday, Christie's South Kensington celebrates 100 years of cinema in style with what is billed as the finest sale of film posters ever staged in Europe. Many are drawn from the collection of the 72-year-old American singer Mel Tormé, with more from the pioneering film producer Hal Roach, best known for his Laurel and Hardy films, who died in 1992, aged 100.

There are so many good posters on offer that it is difficult to select a few to illustrate the range and quality of the collection, but here goes: The Seven Year Itch (1955), the one with Marilyn Monroe and that billowing white dress (estimate £400-£600); the only known copy of Ealing Comedy's The Lavender Hill Mob (1951, artwork by Ronald Searle, estimate £5,000-£7,000): Citizen Kane (1941, estimate £2,500-£3,500); The Outlaw, featuring the generously endowed Jane Russell and irresistibly labelled "Not Suitable for Children", (1946, estimate £250-£450); and, among hundreds of other things, widely collected James Bond posters at modest estimates (£150-£450 each).

Modestly priced, too, is a selection from Hitchcock films: Psycho, Vertigo, To Catch a Thief, Rear Window, Dial M for Murder (all between £200 and £500). The earlier Rebecca (1940) is put at between £1,200 and £1,800.

The Hitchcock posters of the 1950s and 1960s represent an underrated and undervalued field, says Bruce Marchant, an avid collector. "The Hitchcocks of the 1930s can go for £5,000 to £15,000, but the best-known ones, such as Psycho are, for some reason, always very cheap."

Mr Marchant, 30, sometimes trades his duplicates "to make ends meet" while awaiting his next commission as a sculptor ("There haven't been any jobs going for 18 months"). His interest in posters began ten years ago. "A friend had bought a poster for a lurid B picture, Deadly is the Female. He paid $500 for it (international prices for film posters are quoted in American dollars). I told him he was mad. Within months, I had spent $600 on one of only two known British posters for my favourite film, The African Queen. I was hooked." That poster, Mr Marchant says, could now fetch about $2,000 (£1,260).

His collection has grown to about 50, in addition to hundreds of lobby cards (see fact file, right), particularly those featuring Bogart.

The good news for beginners is that there are thousands of lesser posters and lobby cards available, for £5 to £100, at fairs, film memorabilia shows and shops selling old magazines.

"Most of the 1960s stuff is very cheap," Mr Marchant says. "The Beatles and Bond are different — between £200 and £500 — but you see lovely Hammer posters dripping with blood for about £25 and, despite their popularity, some Carry On posters go for as little as £10, lobby cards less.

"The most expensive 1960s poster ever is for the film 2001; 12 different designs were issued, but there is one extremely scarce poster of a psychedelic eye that was sold recently for $3,500 (£2,216). You have to remember that 99 per cent of all film posters sell for less than $1,000 (£633)."

All Mr Marchant says is borne out by three lots in the forthcoming Christie's auction, each of them comprising 250 British quads (see fact file) in varying condition, and estimated at between £200 and £300. Another lot comprises ten war film quads, including The Great Escape, The Guns of Navarone, The Longest Day, The Eagle Has Landed and Von Ryan's Express, from £200 to £300.

However, other films, other prices: in 1993 one of four known one-sheets (see fact file) for Frankenstein (1931) sold for $198,000 (£125,340).

What is Mr Marchant's advice for budding collectors on a tight budget? "Always be guided by your own taste. Some people go for a certain decade or their pet actors and directors — I collect Frank Capra and Bogart lobby cards — but for me the attraction is the artwork itself, the colours and the energy.

"Foreign posters are a good buy: often the image is superior to the standard British or US posters, particularly the Italian ones, and they are a lot cheaper. A good example in the Christie's sale is a Belgian poster for Casablanca (1943), estimated at £600 to £900; the standard US one-sheet would cost more than £3,000.

Mr Marchant recommends consulting all the poster books (Cinema Bookshop and Zwemmer are reliable sources), combing film memorabilia fairs, auction catalogues and specialist shops, such as The Vintage Magazine Company.

How good must the condition of a poster be to make it collectable? "All posters were folded, so creases are inevitable. If the poster is fairly recent, only the odd split would be acceptable. On an older poster, whitening or discoloration along the creases is OK, but no piece should be missing — especially lettering or a star's face — unless the poster is of legendary rarity. Restoration and linen-backing can be carried out on the really scarce items, but this can be more expensive than the price of the poster."

Mr Marchant will be bidding for two posters in the Christie's sale: Birdman of Alcatraz (1962, £200 to £300), with graphics by Saul Bass, one of the most collected of recent artists; and the rare French version of the 1931 Gary Cooper film City Streets. "But," he says, "the latter is estimated at £5,000 to £7,000 and I can't afford it. I'll go for it anyway."

Is this the ultimate poster of his dreams? "No. The one I really want is for an obscure John Wayne film called The Oregon Trail. There are only three known, and if it came up it would probably cost $15,000 (£9,495), but I'd sell everything to get that. It's the best western poster ever ... although I haven't actually seen the film."

☐ US three-sheet — originally pasted up in three pieces, 81in x 40in (and hence rare).

☐ British quad — one piece, 30in x 40in.

☐ British half sheet — one piece, 22in x 28in.

xh☐ Lobby cards — heavy board, 11in x 14in, usually in sets of eight.

☐ Vintage film posters will be sold at Christie's South Kensington, 85 Old Brompton Road, London SW7 (0171 581 7611) on Thursday, March 9, at 2pm. Viewing Tuesday, March 7, 10am-5pm; Wednesday, 9am-5pm; Thursday, 9am-noon.

☐ A film memorabilia fair will be held at Westminster Central Hall, Storey's Gate, London SW1 on Saturday, March 11, 10am-5pm. Entry fee, £5.

SALEROOM

☐ Chinese porcelain recovered from a ship that sank while on its way to Europe 178 years ago, goes on sale at Christie's Amsterdam on Monday and Tuesday. It includes classic Chinese blue and white painted soup tureens by the hundred at £500 to £3,000, and about 5,000 dishes decorated with the distinctive "Starburst" pattern or with the "Double Happiness" design at £50 each.

☐ The "Fifth Beatle", Stuart Sutcliffe, was a skilled artist as a sale of paintings at Phillips shows on Tuesday. His Abstract (£400 to £600) combines scratching techniques, fingerprints and many layers of paint. The sale also features a pencil portrait of the composer Gabriel Fauré by John Singer Sargent, RA (£4,500 to £5,000).

☐ Among the furniture being sold by Bonhams on Wednesday are a Morocco leather workbox in the shape of a sarcophagus at £200 to £300, and a bronze bust of Napoleon at £120 to £180.

☐ Two rare eyebaths are highlights at Phillips pottery sale on Wednesday (£1,200 to £1,500 and £1,500-£1,800).

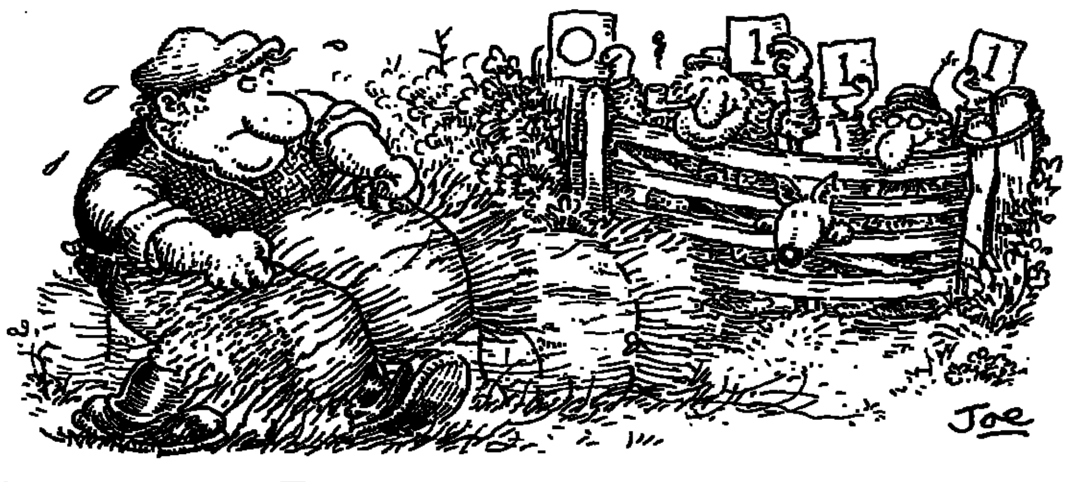
Stacks of flack, but the show goes on



FARMER'S DIARY: PAUL HEINEY

Actually, I beat Stephen Fry to it. A month ago I fled this farm for a week in the Caribbean and, I am not afraid to admit, without so much as a backward glance. After three days away from the muddy ditches, stinking cattle yards and flooded meadows, the palm trees and white-sand beaches worked their magic. I scribbled a postcard to my neighbour, Farmer White, who was in charge of the farm. It said: "Have decided never to return. Please feed cows till further notice." I meant it, too.

I have some sympathy with Fry, for I, too, have to face critics. He may think his are cruel enough, but I bet mine are worse. At least he knows what his think about him. Mine just remain silent.

My critics turn up for a performance of ploughing, drilling, haymaking or harvesting and just lean over the gate, watching and remembering how much better they did it in their day. They may not say a word, but their verdict is written across their faces. On the few occasions when they do bother to speak, it may be some weeks before they get round to making an utterance. I remember last haymaking, when we had worked long hours under a baking sun to gather in a field of clover. We got to five o'clock and could not lift one more forkful. We called it a day. I bumped into an old boy a couple of days later who mumbled as we passed in the street: "I'd tave got that last bit in, if it tad been me." Meaning: you idle youngster, you are not half the farmer I was, and never will be. The old boys do not waste words where one crisp phrase will do the devastating job. It is enough to have anybody heading for the Ramsgate ferry.

But self-criticism is just as wounding. Having learnt what I know from the writings of some of the great farmers of the first half of this century, I set myself a high standard when I started this farming project, and regularly fail to live up to it. On a daily basis I am reminded of how many of the basic farming tasks I have so far failed to grasp. Certainly there have been successes, but these always seem to be eclipsed by niggling deficiencies, which cannot be ignored.

Take, for example, a simple job such as building a stack of bales of straw. This should be the easiest thing in the world. But I have tried it now for five successive seasons and have yet to achieve a lasting result. Perhaps it is because I never had Lego as a child.

We buy bales of straw after harvest every year, for we simply cannot grow enough straw for our own use, and we build a stack near the stockyard so that we do not have to haul it far in the winter. It is vital that the stack be solid and stable, otherwise successive gales of winter wind will demolish it, or cracks will appear between the bales, down which the rain will pour and ruin the straw.

After five years of trying I can still not do it. "You want to watch a bricklayer," is the only advice I have been given. I have scanned books and pamphlets, but without gathering any clues. I imagine the writers assume this to be a task so basic as to be hardly worth describing. Well, I wish someone would describe it to me. I can build the base, and the next layer, but by layer four or five, no matter how I place the bales, there is always a vertical gap running up through the stack, which eventually leads to instability. My stacks need no trumpeters to bring them tumbling down.

Consequently, we always start winter on a bad note, with a stack of damp straw with which to bed the animals. It is like offering them a damp sleeping-bag to crawl into, and not made any easier when the critics amble up the lane, muttering. It is all very public, too, open to as much scrutiny as any West End performance.

One year, I tried to build the stack in the barn, so that at least if it did fall apart it would not get soaked and ruined. I even got that wrong. I thought it would be in order for the bales to rest against the walls of the barn to keep the stack upright. No, the *critics said; the stack had to be self-*supporting or it was "no stack at all".

If I were an actor going back through the newspaper cuttings looking for a rave review, I could not find one; if this were a theatre and the management was looking for a quote to put up in lights — "this one will run and run" — they would be hard-pressed to find a couple of words of praise to stick together.

But I must not get downhearted. At least the livestock seem to enjoy the performance. I am sure that some of them would applaud if they could. The show must go on. Even when the bales of straw, and all the odds, seem to be stacking up against you.

Soft landing for chicks

The male eider duck

FOR people living in the south of England, the eider duck — or, as it is generally called, the eider — is an exotic bird. I still remember my first sight of one as a schoolboy — looking down from a cliff on the Mull of Kintyre, and seeing this gleaming white bird on the blue water far below.

In fact, the eider is the second commonest breeding duck in Britain, after the mallard. The coasts of Scotland and North-East England are home to about 30,000 pairs, and that is only a small proportion of the two million eiders that are scattered throughout the Arctic region. On the large pond in the middle of Reykjavik, the capital of Iceland, they swim about like domestic duck. You might call the eider "the mallard of the north".

The drakes are brilliant white, with a black cap and black flanks. Just now they are displaying offshore to the females, crooning and throwing their heads back violently to show off their puffed-up white throats. The females are dull birds by comparison, brown mottled with black, but they are easily identified by the curious shape of the head — the forehead and beak plunge in a single straight line.

They sit on the rocks, and go out to feed on mussels and crabs when the tide is right. They start nesting in April, in the mouths of rabbit holes, or *simply in clumps of sea campi*on or heather. Beneath the incubating female — who is well camouflaged by her plumage — lies a layer of eiderdown that she has plucked from her own underside.

This, of course, used to be collected to keep humans warm in bed. But now the nests are protected, and only the female and her eggs enjoy its benefits. The ducklings make little use of it, for they go down to the sea almost as soon as they are hatched. But they are clothed in their own warm coat of down.

A village reunited

A community long divided by a 'rat run' is at last rediscovering itself

"Sorry, no muddy boots", says a notice outside the Horse and Groom just above Patching village. This must be Canute country. A stone's throw away, banded by red and white bollards, and bogged down in the heaviest of clay, are JCBs and tractors engaged in the huge digging operation that is the A27 West Sussex Patching Junction Improvement Scheme.

Behind the mud pile that has been created, the 180 residents of Patching are busy preparing for the road scheme's completion this summer.

For years their lane has been used as a rat run for impatient travellers zipping between the A280 and the A27. The road scheme, first lobbied for in 1972, will divert that traffic, and the travel-worn lane will resume its rightful place in the heart of the Patching community.

"The lane," says Robin Tilley, a solicitor and clerk of Patching Parish Council, "is the only property common to everyone in the village. For years it has effectively been denied to us."

Since the problems with the lane, the village has been cut in two. Robin Tilley is at the head of a movement to heal the wound. With the opening of the by-pass there will be a street party. "Then," he says, "we are going to plant up the verges with wildflowers, and possibly plant mulberry trees on the traffic island we will have at the end of the lane.

"Up to now cars have been driving onto the verges to pass and the council has made the damage good with unsightly tarmac. We are going to replace that with grass. The lane has been flooded regularly. All the ditches and brooks need clearing out and deepening. The culverts are silted up and too small to clear out so we are putting in bigger ones."

Such talk might seem high-flown but Mr Tilley and Patching Parish Council have already put in place a village enhancement scheme in anticipation of the lane's new lease of life. Many villagers spend some of their weekends sprucing up the environment.

High on a long list of projects is putting back the hedges. Some were removed in the 1970s by farmers chasing EC grants. Others have been neglected because of a decline in the number of farm labourers. The parish council initially gave a £1,500 grant for chainsaws, bill hooks, axes, brush cutters, shovels and spades, and sponsored training days with the South of England Hedge Laying Society. Peter Footman, a local carpenter who is one of dozens of Patching hedgelayers, says: "The hedges are good for wild*life. They also stop snow drift*ing and act as windbreaks."

Peter Woodward, who earns a living making and repairing violins, violas and cellos, says the hedging has fostered camaraderie among the workers. "And, when the work is done, you can see it every day," he adds.

There is a Patching body of opinion that thinks hedging is up to the farmers. Mr Tilley disputes this. "It is," he says, "unrealistic and probably unfair to expect the farmers who have already been pushed and pulled in all sorts of directions by different policies suddenly to plant lots of hedges, which are of little use to them, when they do not have the labour force to look after them."

He believes that, as many of the villagers live in what were once agricultural labourers' cottages, they should take over some of their predecessors' roles. "It should be a partner*ship of parish and farm.*"

Mr Tilley has also organised the parishioners to conduct nocturnal moth and bat counts, set up bat boxes and to construct a dew pond on Patching Hill as a wildlife habitat. He has also commissioned a general habitat survey of the parish.

Twelve new stiles have been built by residents of Patching and of neighbouring Clapham. Also, over a weekend, 30 people were involved in resur*facing the road to the church.* "Until then," Mr Tilley says, "vulnerable people in the community, the elderly, those in wheelchairs — and we have quite a few — and mothers with prams, were unable to gain access to the church."

Footpaths and bridleways have been cleared and, one day in 1993, four tractors and trailers were used to carry villagers taking part in the traditional ceremony of beating the parish bounds. Despite driving rain, fifty people stayed the three-hour course.

Rain also dominated the village barn dance. "It tipped down," recalls Mr Tilley, "and the roof leaks so there were buckets everywhere. The downpour brought everyone together; it added to the community spirit."

In 1992, the 2,091-acre historic village of Patching, along with Clapham, earned a place in the Guinness Book of Records with their world field-to-loaf record for producing a baker's dozen from standing corn in 12 minutes 11 seconds. "All cut," Mr Tilley says, "with vintage farm equipment." The loaf was microwaved.

Braced by this achievement, last year the parish compiled a report on its many environ*mental projects and entered* for the Colonel Sanders Environmental Awards, which attracted 250 entries from councils, voluntary groups and schools around the country. Patching came third, pipped to the post only by Gwent County Council and the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea.

Future plans include coppicing the side of Patching pond and mending the village clock, the hands of which have been rusting at 6.30 for a decade now. "Ideally, we would like to put back the huge weights that used to run it, but the house the clock is on has been converted and won't carry them so he clock will have to be electrified," says Mr Tilley.

Meanwhile, he is composing a hedge-layers barn dance. "It will be a bit like Zorba the Greek," he says, "getting faster and faster."

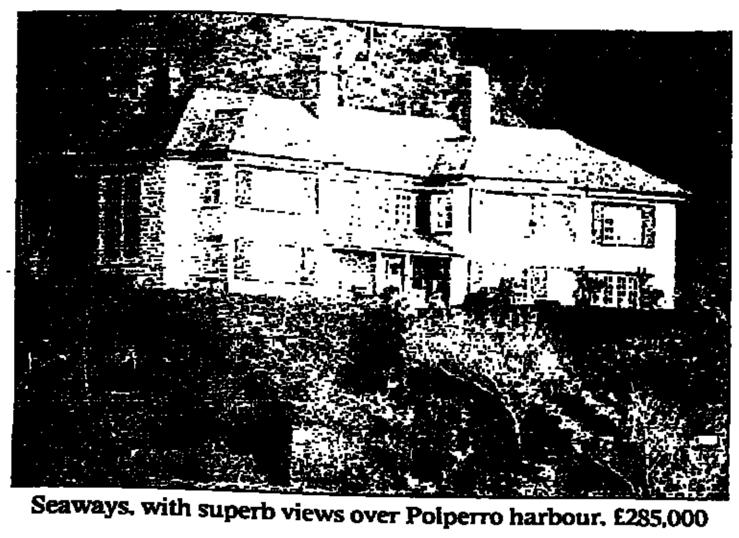
The flood alerts across Europe have not diminished the attraction of homes close to water



Seaways, with superb views over Polperro harbour, £285,000

Splash out on a view

A three-bedroom waterfront flat at Moriconium Quay, in Poole Harbour, is for sale at £225,000

The most cherished of all views is that over water — be it river, lake, sea or old mill stream. One thing is certain, however: waterfront homes do not come cheap. Most estate agents agree that houses with a waterside view will sell more quickly and fetch higher than average prices, despite the fact that a large part of Europe has recently been on flood alert.

The mere glimpse of river, lake or sea will add between 15 and 25 per cent to average prices in most parts of Britain. Homes on the waterfront will cost between 30 and 50 per cent more; a private berth at the bottom of the garden puts a further 15 per cent on the value.

According to Robert Theobald, director of Fulfords' Waterside Homes, waterfront homes are in strong demand. "Our customers come from every age group, looking to buy second homes often with a view to permanent residence. Most own boats; some simply like living alongside them. The risk of flooding does not seem to deter them."

It is possible to allow for flooding in the design of a property. Floors should be tiled or slated, with no timber skirting boards. There should be minimal furnishings which can easily be removed to first floor level. Houses with cellars can be fitted with automatic pumps. Some waterfront homes have their own flood defences and can be surrounded with substantial walls or mounds. Driveways need to be raised, and provision made to stop the contents of drains flowing the wrong way.

Seaside homes are a more expensive maintenance proposition. Because of the salt spray, the outside of the house will need repainting at least every two years, instead of the normal six or seven.

As far as riverside properties are concerned, it is important to check their position with regard to the sun, says Jeremy Miller, of the West Country agents Millerson: "Often one side of a river has ample sunshine, while the other bank has more than its fair share of shade.

"Boating enthusiasts will also be concerned about the depth and amount of high water within the estuary. Some parts of a river are either very shallow or have little time, either side of high tide, for any access to boats."

In the yachting mecca of Dartmouth, homes for sale fronting the river Dart are as common as unicorns. A substantial Victorian family house, set back from the waterfront, with four bedrooms, three reception rooms and views over the Dart Estuary to the sea, has recently come on the market at £275,000, through Fulfords' Dartmouth office (01395 222723).

Those wanting a property with a mooring might be interested in "Fairhaven" at Tacketwood, near Kingsbridge, in Devon. On sale at £215,000 through Fulfords, the detached four-bedroom bungalow has a 60ft frontage to the Kingsbridge estuary, and a mooring at the bottom of the garden.

In Dorset, boat lovers are paying up to £225,000 for a three-bedroom waterfront flat at Moriconium Quay, Poole Harbour's new marina village development. An 8-metre deep-water berth at the back door costs another £19,500. The selling agent is Savills (01202 887331).

If you prefer fishing to boating, The Old Mill at Ramsbury in Wiltshire, on offer at £750,000 through Knight, Frank & Rutley in Hungerford (01488 682726), might appeal. The six-bedroom Grade II listed house, in 16½ acres of riverside gardens and water meadows, has two thirds of a mile of trout fishing on the river Kennet.

A beautifully situated riverside country house, near the village of Coalport in Shropshire, is on offer at £425,000 through Savills in Banbury (01295 263535). The seven-bedroom Sweyney Cliff House, built on the site of the famous Swinney Mill, is set in 7½ acres of water gardens, cliffs and wooded grounds, overlooking a gorge on the banks of the river Severn.

Sweyney Cliff House, £425,000

Alternatively, for sea views, a house with a superb outlook over Polperro harbour entrance and the Cornish coastline beyond can be yours for £285,000, through Millerson in Liskeard (01579 344401). "Seaways", which is surrounded by National Trust land, has five bedrooms, three bathrooms and three reception rooms, and comes with terraced south-facing gardens.

In London's Docklands, waterfront homes carry premiums ranging from 20 per cent on the Isle of Dogs to as much as 35 per cent for a view of Tower Bridge.

According to Rick Folkes, of Chestertons Residential's Tower Bridge office (0171-357 7999), a river view adds drama to a property. "Hong Kong investors are particularly aware of the value of water," he says. Chestertons is seeking offers in the region of £500,000 for a 120-year lease on a three-bedroom penthouse at President's Quay, St Katharine's Way, which has a terrace overlooking the Thames and Tower Bridge.

On the other side of the Thames, a lower floor split-level two bedroomed apartment at The Anchor Brewhouse, where the river laps just 12 inches below the window sills, has recently sold for the asking price of £349,000 through Carleton Smith of Wapping. The property has a 116-year lease.

Be prepared if the worst happens

The Association of British Insurers advises homeowners to take the following precautions to minimise possible damage if there is an imminent danger of flooding:

☐ Move whatever furniture and other belongings you can upstairs, including food, warm clothing, drinking water, battery radio and torch. Put sandbags against doorways and air bricks.

☐ Turn off electricity at the main fuse box. Keep buildings and contents insurance policies to hand. Make sure you know who to contact should you need to make a claim and keep details of emergency helpline numbers.

☐ If flood damage occurs, you should arrange for temporary repairs to prevent any further damage. For example, placing plastic sheeting or tarpaulin over storm damaged roofs to stop further rain getting in. Contact your insurers as soon as possible.

☐ Keep receipts for any work carried out as these will normally form part of your claim. Some insurers provide an emergency helpline service, this will help you to find a tradesman to carry out repairs. It is important to keep damaged items, the insurance company may want to see them.

☐ Flood water can make buildings unsafe. Doors and windows may swell and floors may bulge. To get in, you will cause less damage by forcing windows rather than doors.

☐ When the water recedes, remove floor coverings and wash walls and floors in disinfectant solution. It is important to get warm air circulating. Leave windows, doors and built-in cupboards open for moist air to escape. Keep rooms heated.

☐ Lift one or two floorboards to increase under-floor draughts. Pull furniture away from walls. Oil hinges and locks to prevent them seizing.

☐ Wait at least six months before laying carpets or floor covering, even though the floorboards may look and feel dry earlier. Check under floorboards after six and twelve months for signs of dry rot. If you find any, get expert advice.

Damage to buildings and contents by flood is an insured risk, covered in nearly all insurance policies, including waterfront homes. However, some buildings policies carry an excess, which means you pay up to £100 of any claim. If the risk of flood is considered high, the excess may be £1,000 or more, and the premium will be higher.

Your home should be insured for the full rebuilding cost, not its market value, which includes the cost of the land. Rebuilding costs will include permanent fittings such as central heating and additional fees such as demolition costs. Most insurers offer index-linked policies so that the sum insured goes up in line with rebuilding costs.

If your contents policy is on a "new for old" basis you will be paid the full cost of repairing damaged items, or replacing them at current prices (although this may not apply to clothing). Others give basic "indemnity" cover, which means an amount will be deducted for wear and tear. Most insurance companies will require purchase receipts for goods claimed, and professional valuations for items such as jewellery.

A bad sign for home owners

Don't risk being under-insured. Your contents sum should be sufficient to enable you to replace all your possessions if they are destroyed. If you do not have adequate cover the insurance company can refuse your claim.

Roald Dahl: complex and courageous

■ ROALD DAHL
By Jeremy Treglown
Faber, £6.99

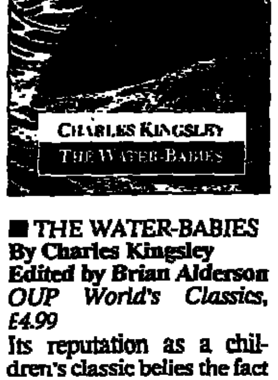
When Dahl's baby son Theo suffered brain damage, one of Dahl's responses was to invent a better kind of valve to drain the fluid from his brain. This controlling energy was typical of him, and it saw him through other family tragedies, including the stroke that his wife, Patricia Neal, suffered at the height of her film career. But it made him hard to live with, and in spite of his charisma and his success, his life was scattered with fractured relationships. Treglown's even-handed biography gives a fascinating account of this complex and courageous character.

■ THE HIPPOPOTAMUS
By Stephen Fry
Arrow, £5.99

Is the troubled Fry right when he complains that he is spreading himself thinly across too many disciplines? Certainly he writes wittily and has a subject — the infidelities of the inheritance classes — but, in truth, he is still to find his fictional voice. Wallace is a struggling hack and failed poet. Intrigued by miracles happening at a friend's country mansion, he goes to investigate, only to find himself the unwitting protector of an adolescent, whose beauty and healing powers make him the object of desire for men, women and . . . horses.

■ ISOLINA
By Dacia Maraini
The Women's Press, £6.99

When the dismembered body of a young woman was washed up on the banks of the Tiber in January 1990, it was quickly established that the victim was 19-year-old Isolina Canuti. But no one was tried for her murder because the authorities refused to press charges against the most likely suspects. Prize-winning Italian writer Dacia Maraini turns detective in this carefully researched reconstruction of the case which exposes a self-protecting establishment at its most corrupt and hypocritical.



■ THE WATER-BABIES
By Charles Kingsley
Edited by Brian Alderson
OUP World's Classics, £4.99

Its reputation as a children's classic belies the fact that The Water-Babies is a difficult book. The little chimney sweep's fantastic underwater adventures are interrupted by long philosophical asides beyond the comprehension of most adults, let alone the "dear little man" to whom the book is addressed. In this new edition Alderson explains the many obscure references that pepper the narrative, and explores the 19th-century passions and obsessions that led Kingsley to write this mysterious, enchanting tale.

Let's review the facts

There is no basis to the book-trade's sour whinges about the press

DANIEL JOHNSON

Why do serious newspapers such as The Times devote so much space to books? Not for the sake of writers, still less the book trade, but because books matter to our readers. In an average year, several thousand new books will be mentioned or reviewed in The Times, some of them at great length. It is a service that must be worth untold millions a year to publishers and booksellers. These free advertisements we call reviews are one of the reasons why publishers rarely bother to advertise their books in the press. Books are practically the only commercial products which regularly receive such privileged treatment.

And yet, the press gets no thanks from the book trade. In The Bookseller last week, newspapers were excoriated for devoting too little space to book-reviewing. The excuse was the impending departure of the literary editor of The Sunday Times, Harry Ritchie, though there is no suggestion that he left because his space had been or might be reduced. The report then mentioned a couple of unrelated resignations of literary editors — Richard Gott's from The Guardian and Robert Winder's from The Independent — and concluded: "Once one of the most prestigious and sought after jobs in Fleet Street, the role of literary editor is fast becoming one of the least desirable."

This is a non sequitur. Some literary editors of the older generation occupied their chairs for more than a decade: for instance, the late Terry Kilmartin, W. L. Webb, David Holloway, Derwent May, Philip Howard. Whether or not such long tenures were necessarily desirable, it is meaningless to compare the old Fleet Street with the new: since the mid-1980s, journalists have tended to change jobs more often, because editors prefer it and also because there have been more opportunities to do so. This has nothing to do with the prestige or desirability of posts such as that of literary editor.

"The current upheaval seems to reflect the poor light in which books are held by the current generation of newspaper editors and their masters," The Bookseller continues. It does nothing of the kind. The space available for book reviews fluctuates, as it does for every other part of a modern paper: the Saturday Times has indeed reduced its coverage to one page, but this is a temporary measure, and the normal two pages will resume on March 18.

Just as more books are written than ever before, so they are more written about. With important works, this often extends far beyond the books pages. Simon Schama's Landscape and Memory, published in April, might be the occasion for debate on the comment and leader pages of The Times, for an interview and for a Times lecture — quite apart from a substantial review.

How does this compare with the past? Before 1939, The Times gave at most a column a week to books. During the paper shortage which lasted through the war and long after, books were scarcely reviewed at all. Under Sir William Haley, there was some improvement, but only in 1967, under William (now Lord) Rees-Mogg, was a literary editor appointed and a weekly books page instituted. Now The Times has four books pages a week.

So much for quantity. As for quality: on the Thursday books pages last month and this, readers have been able to sample extracts from past reviews of famous novels. Comparisons are tricky — stylistic conventions have changed so much — but it seems to me that reviews in The Times today are on the whole better written than they were. In literary journalism this is, if not the best of times, certainly not the worst.

In the light of the dying

Ginny Dougary is moved by a brave account of a mother's death

ANNA Quindlen is a big name in America. Her column in the New York Times has been syndicated, published in book form, and honoured in 1992 with a Pulitzer Prize.

She is also a bestselling novelist. One True Thing, Quindlen's second work of fiction, can be read as a natural progression for a journalist whose self-avowed strength is in humanising the big issues of the day. In this case, it is the all-too-human issue of euthanasia.

Quindlen: unflinching gaze

Ellen Gulden, the heroine, is a 24-year-old magazine journalist who reluctantly leaves her Manhattan life to nurse her mother, Kate, who is dying of cancer. When Quindlen was 19, she left college to nurse her mother who was dying of cancer. So it is tempting to read the novel — in terms of its emotional veracity, at least — as autobiography.

Euthanasia is the issue, but the real drama (as opposed to the courtroom drama of Ellen's trial, which is tacked on to the end) lies in the slow-dawning discovery that it is her mother — not her academic, rakish father, George, whom she has idolised and been shaped by — who is the "one true thing" in her life.

■ ONE TRUE THING
By Anna Quindlen
Chatto and Windus, £9.99

Quindlen, the journalist, has been described as "timidly girlish". There is nothing timid or girlish about Quindlen the novelist. Her tone is unremittingly unsentimental. The emotion is so pared back, one could miss it altogether. Her gaze is unflinching but never clinical, as she itemises the mother's physical decay — her slack skin "like soft fruit when it's past its prime", "the yawning Os of the eye sockets", her pubic hair all but gone.

But it is the small-canvas details which are as striking as the visceral moments in between — the descriptions of Langhorne, the college town to which Ellen has returned, with its absurd but comforting olde-worlde traditions: the decorating of the Christmas trees by its womenfolk, the "Minies", and Ellen's mother's raging fury at her fading membership of their circle.

This is a brave and beautiful book. On every page, there is a phrase which describes a look or a smile or a feeling that is so telling, and so true, it catches your throat. I only wish that Quindlen had been courageous enough to finish her book a hundred pages earlier, with the natural ending of her mother's death.

Zissou and the ghost (1905): an early experiment in double exposure from Jacques-Henri Lartigue, Boy with a Camera by John Cech (Pavilion Books, £9.99), an introduction for young readers to the work of the influential French photographer

Anne Redmon traces all the Byzantine intricacies of internecine strife

The mother of a family feud

■ THE JUDGEMENT OF SOLOMON
By Anne Redmon
Sinclair Stevenson, £9.99

ONE finishes Anne Redmon's novel, the second in a trilogy, with the feeling not only that one would like to have read the first volume, but that the third will be something to look forward to.

Like her literary precursors, Olivia Manning and Lawrence Durrell — both of whom also set their three and four-decker novels against the backdrop of the former Byzantine empire — Redmon has a large cast of characters to manage. She does so without losing either the narrative pace or the reader's interest in the central theme — which, as the title suggests, is the nature of maternal love.

The story begins with a portrayal of two unhappy marriages. The first is that of Catherine and Theo Phocas, a wealthy but childless couple who live with their adopted daughter, Xenia, on the Greek island of Chios; the second is that of Catherine's brother, Charles Simon, and his American wife, Rosamund, who have discovered — after 25 years of marriage and five children — that they no longer love one another. As the novel opens, Charles is on the point of leaving his wife for another woman.

This volatile situation becomes even more so with the arrival of Missy Kavanagh, Rosamund's sexy but unscrupulous cousin from America, after an absence of almost 20 years. Missy tells Rosamund that Xenia is actually her child — conceived during an adulterous fling with Theo 18 years before. She is on her way to Greece to reassert her maternal claim over Xenia, as a way of avenging herself on her former lover.

What follows is an intricately-plotted drama of divided loyalties, in which the tension is sustained until the very end. Redmon is particularly good on the internecine conflicts of family life, and there are some enjoyable set-pieces, including the awful Christmas party at which Missy first sets her sights on Theo, and the no less electrifying scene, 20 years on, when Catherine finally confronts her errant husband with her knowledge of his guilt.

With its exotic setting and its cast of aristocratic Anglo-Catholics and eccentric millionaires, Redmon's novel has more than a touch of the popular romance about it. What sets it apart from genre fiction is the quality of the writing, and the subtlety the author brings to her reworking of a universal story.

CHRISTINA KONING

Sex and drugs and the critic caught

■ A CROOKED MAN
By Christopher Lehmann-Haupt
Little, Brown, £15.99

■ JUST WHEN WE ARE SAFEST
By Reg Gadney
Faber, £14.99

UNDOUBTEDLY the hardest thing for a good critic to guarantee is a good review for his own book. Christopher Lehmann-Haupt has made a reputation on the New York Times for handing out tough notices so it is unsurprising that he says the typical response to his decision to write a thriller was: "Are you going to publish it under your own name?" Well, he has done just that and I would like to know if he is regretting it.

A Crooked Man is a perfectly competent thriller about skulduggery in the corridors of power in Washington, coupled with some tendentious views on drug legislation reform and impressive detail about fly-fishing.

Unfortunately, competence is as far as it goes. Particularly towards the end of the book, as it moves towards a cliffhanger climax, the tension builds relentlessly. By then, however, the "whodunit?" issue has been resolved, which is just as well because I had guessed the answer within the first 50 pages.

The book is also an implicit argument for the decriminalisation of drugs as a means of killing off both the organised crime syndicates and drug-related robberies by junkies. I fear Lehmann-Haupt's suggestion of a loophole for passing the legislation, however, may be as naive as the character of his amiable, inefficient senator hero, who is more than ready to believe the Mafia are really nice guys.

By contrast, Reg Gadney's new novel, Just When We Are Safest, features almost no nice guys at all. This is a strange tale of multiple double-dealing within the ranks of the IRA, MI5, the Metropolitan Police, Special Branch and Customs and Excise. That's right, all of them. And what most of it seems to come down to is sex: lesbian sex, sado-masochistic sex and a bit of old-fashioned straight sex. That said, there is more violence in the book than sex.

Gadney's contorted plot reduces anti-terrorist strategy and inter-service rivalry to steamy personal relationships, which may not be that far from the truth. I enjoyed the cameo of John Major in the unnamed Prime Minister who "looks larger than he appears on television" and says "wunt" instead of "want". But the denouement in MI5's new Thames-side headquarters is less apocalyptic than we are led to anticipate.

The book's payoff, however, redeems its flaws, even if it does take us back to the basic instinct.

PETER MILLAR

Smoke without fire

■ CIGARETTES ARE SUBLIME
By Richard Klein
Picador, £5.99

I LOVE this book because I love smoking, and this book is a celebration, as well as a history, of smoking. Richard Klein looks at cigarette smoking from every conceivable angle, from tip to filter, packet to butt. He examines the history, the economics, the significant culture of cigarettes, and the cultural significance of cigarettes. He sees them for what they are, a "negative pleasure", a "crucial integer of our modernity", a rich, complex subject.

I love this book because for all of my smoking life I have been made to feel bad about smoking, made to feel that my continued smoking resulted from a terrible weakness of will and that therefore it was uninteresting, made to feel that there was only one stark, medical issue involved in smoking — how to give it up. This book reignites a smouldering belief I have long held, but which has lain buried under the cold ash of disapproval, that there was a lot more to it than that.

The smoker's smoker: Bogart in The Maltese Falcon

I love this book because it is not a saloon-bar rant about how cigarettes are really good for you, because, you know, my grandad smoked 80 Woodbines a day and lived to be 100, etc. Klein accepts without hesitation that cigarettes are bad for your physical health and shorten countless lives.

I love this book because Klein, in language a lot better than phrases such as "crucial integer" imply, bothers to try to answer the question: why? Why, as fully cognisant adults, do we keep going? What is it about human nature that keeps us in love with something that is destroying us? That is a question which all the stop-smoking gurus fail to address, which all the anti-advertising, anti-tobacco campaigning ignores, which all the pious non-smokers — each, no doubt, battling unsuccessfully with his own addictions — prefer not to explore.

And finally, I love this book because, heroically, Klein has now renounced the pleasure he loves, not through some iron act of will, but as a direct result of coming fully to understand it in all its tragic glory. His method might be a lesson to us all.

ROBERT CRAMPTON

As violent as the next man

■ THE VIOLENCE OF OUR LIVES: interviews with life-sentence prisoners in America
By Tony Parker
HarperCollins, £18

THE opening paragraph of any review of a book by Tony Parker almost writes itself. There must be at least a sentence on his skilful and distinctive editing of the tape-recorded interviews, a couple of remarks about his constant readiness to respect the integrity of other people's lives, and a few phrases about his inimitable capacity to combine compassion with objectivity. These qualities are as evident in this collection of interviews with American life-sentence prisoners as they were 30 years ago in his gentle questioning of the professional criminal "Robert Allerton" in The Courage of His Convictions.

But such universal respect for Parker's anthropological sensitivity can occasionally obscure the way in which his books are powerful arguments against many of the beliefs about human motivation so insistently peddled by political and academic experts. In the very month in which biologists and psychologists have been openly discussing the possibility of a genetic contribution to violence, Parker arrives on the scene with 18 accounts of violence that are utterly incompatible with any view of it as a single phenomenon. There is not much more in common between the violence perpetrated by Hank Sullivan ("All of my killings, they've had a purpose. I'm a professional criminal") and domestic murderer Carrie Hammick ("If he'd just backed off, he'd still have been alive today") than there is between the passivity of Mahatma Gandhi and Rip Van Winkle.

Neither will Parker's interviewees fit comfortably into any of the routine theories about the role of childhood abuse or drugs or bad companions in later criminality. Several still find what they did inexplicable, some still search for rationalisations, others take complete responsibility for the destruction and misery they set loose upon the world.

This does not merely remind us of the motivational affinity between their lives and our own, it makes (and remakes) the tough political point that our search for a single way of controlling violent crime is every bit as ridiculous as our hunt for its unitary origin.

Exhibition of elegance

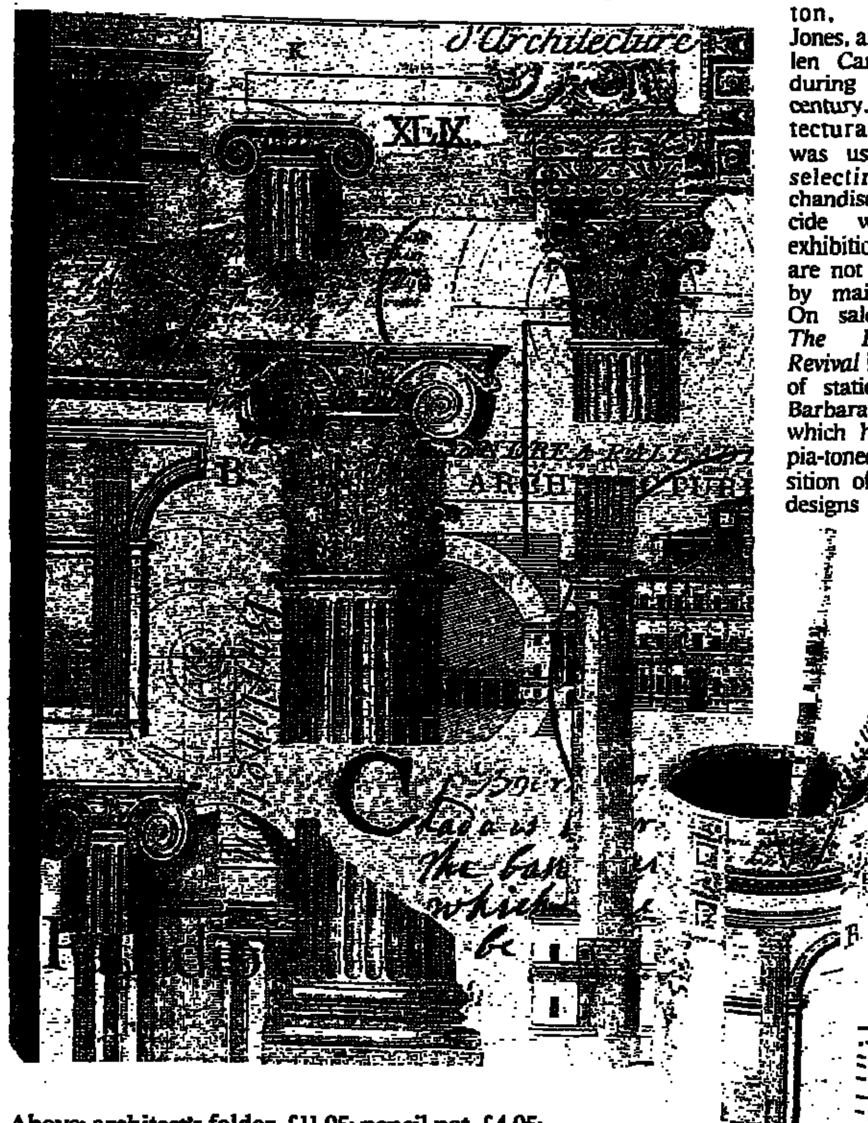
SITTING discreetly between the grand hotels and shops on London's Piccadilly, Burlington House is home to the Royal Academy, which houses some of the most definitive temporary art exhibitions in the capital. It is also the address of the Royal Academy Shop, one of London's best-kept shopping secrets.

The shop contains merchandise designed or inspired by Royal Academicians — 80 elected members of the RA who are all practising painters, sculptors, printmakers or architects. Peter Blake, Sir Norman Foster and David Hockney are all Academicians, and the list of past members includes John Constable, Thomas Gainsborough, J. M. W. Turner and Sir Joshua Reynolds, the RA's founding president.

The shop sells a wide range of products not affected by the changing exhibitions, many of which are also available from the RA mail-order catalogue. Pieces are commissioned from Academicians and young artists training at the Academy Schools behind the public galleries. The Academy also buys in and commissions products to complement exhibitions.

The current exhibition at the RA, The Palladian Revival, examines the influence of 16th-century Italian architect Andrea Palladio on British designers such as Lord Burlington, Inigo Jones, and Colen Campbell during the 18th century. An architectural theme was used when selecting merchandise to coincide with the exhibition. (These are not available by mail order.) On sale during The Palladian Revival is a range of stationery by Barbara Wiggins, which has a sepia-toned composition of detailed designs printed on a cylindrical pencil pot (£4.95), matching pencils (75p each) and an architect's folder and clipboard (£11.95).

The Royal Academy shop has a fine selection of gifts, many designed by luminaries of the arts world

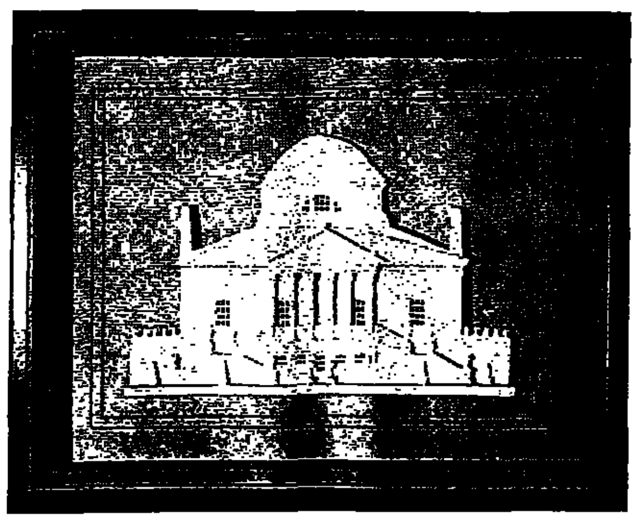


Above: architect's folder, £11.95; pencil pot, £4.95: pencils, 75p, from a range by Barbara Wiggins

Jewellery designer Pamina has produced a collection inspired by sleek Ionic columns: smart silver cufflinks (£49.95) or gilt (£69.95); a silver keyring (£70) with a cut-out based on Michaelangelo's Study for a Portal, which inspired Palladio, and consequently, Lord Burlington; and a lady's silver cuff with an architectural design (£150).

There is a black and white clock kit, sold as a flatpack (£24.95), which is easily assembled to mimic a columned Palladian-style villa.

A cushion (£45) by Emma and Timothy Ross is screen-printed with a striking black and white elevation of Chiswick House — designed and built in the Palladian style by Richard Boyle, the third Lord Burlington, between 1727 and 1729, and used as his London residence. Chiswick House is the focus of the RA exhibition, which includes more than 122 original paintings, drawings and engravings. Boyle's passion for this classical style is reflected in his design for Burlington House itself, which he remodelled during the early 18th century, with the Piccadilly frontage designed by Colen Campbell.



Bas-relief of Chiswick House, £195, by ceramicist Jill Laurimore, from a limited edition inspired by Henry Flitcroft's 18th-century drawings of Chiswick House

It is Henry Flitcroft's 1727 drawings of Chiswick House which inspired a limited edition series of bas-reliefs, created by ceramicist Jill Laurimore, on sale in the RA Shop at £195 each during the exhibition. Ms Laurimore sculpts her works freehand in clay before casting them in plaster of Paris. Alongside Chiswick House, her Villa Rotonda is based on a 1570 woodcut in Palladio's famous architectural manual I Quattro Libri dell'Architettura, one of Lord Burlington's original inspirations for his Chiswick House design.

The Royal Academy's shop and mail-order catalogue also includes the Make It and Play It Chess Set designed by architect Edward Cullinan CBE RA. The Kings are modelled on Mongol Emperor Ghengis Khan and the queens on Elizabeth I, which you make yourself from pre-printed card. Cullinan also created a decanter (£115), with a stopper based on his designs for the new library roof at St John's College, Cambridge.

ARCHIBLOCKS (£44.95) are a delight for anyone who takes pleasure in building things, and knocking them down again. Made from maple, there are 57 blocks, from turrets to basic bricks. A children's version with 46 half-size pieces is £19.95.

Fun With Architecture is an ingenious kit that comes with 32 stamps and an inkpad to enable you to create all the basic elements of architecture. A guidebook shows how to fit the elements together to restore famous buildings or to create new masterpieces.

The shop also has a set of wooden Miró dominos (£49.95). Instead of the usual spots they have brightly coloured abstract motifs from Miró's paintings.

The printed silk Burlington House collection is an ongoing tribute to the Royal Academy's home. A 38in square scarf in Prussian blue and claret overprinted with architectural designs is £69.95; a matching waistcoat costs £125, a tie, £29.95.

MEXICO: From Mayan to modern, the country remains as mysterious as ever

Where mañana never comes

TONY STONE

Beyond the ubiquitous flamboyance of Mexico's colourful costumes and sombreros lie intriguing ancient cultures well worth exploring

He looked scared but determined: a ragged boy aged about nine, grasshopper-thin, juggling tennis balls among cars revving at the traffic lights, hoping for a few pesos. I had just left one of the most luxurious hotels in the world; spectacular Mayan pyramids loomed in the distance.

Mexico is like that. A country of extremes. Stretching for 1,500 miles, south of the United States, it has a warm climate, impressive coasts and mountain ranges and well-established resorts. But a holiday in Mexico can never be like one in Tenerife or the Balearics. From the moment you elbow your way through the crowds and the beggars at the airport, it becomes obvious that this is a complex country, defying you to get under its skin.

The decisive event in shaping the country was the Spanish conquest of the Aztec empire in 1521. The result is still visible in the faces you see on a short walk through any town. There is an élite of Spanish descent, mestizos of mixed blood, and, at the bottom of the heap, indigenas (Indians) still retaining their pre-Cortes identity but little else. The tensions between them are palpable; this is a hot-blooded, torn, dysfunctional society. In the capital, Mexico City, there is a murder every 90 minutes.

Mexico is home to one of the oldest civilisations, destroyed by conquest and followed by 400 years of intermittent civil war and revolution. Until recently, the career progression of most political leaders was toward a post before a firing squad. Emiliano Zapata, assassinated in 1919, still has followers among the Chiapas Indians, hundreds of whom died in an uprising only a year ago. The survivors are now camped on the streets of the capital, demanding restoration of their land.

When the politics become too confusing, relax in the sun: take in the colour, the tequila, lush vegetation; meet people who are welcoming, laid-back and cheerful. Mañana.

Mexico City sprawls to a length of 40 miles, a bizarre mixture of proud colonial architecture and shanty towns. Twenty million people live here, including an estimated two million street children, many surviving by prostitution. Dense traffic creates pollution that turns the air brown, and petrol fumes make it difficult to breathe: but among the chaos are 16th-century monasteries, baroque churches of great beauty and dramatic Aztec remains.

On the edge of the metropolis is Teotihuacan, a largely intact Mayan city abandoned in the 7th century (the Aztecs came later). The massive Pyramids of the Sun and Moon are linked by the Avenue of the Dead, a paved, ceremonial way lined with the shells of temples and palaces. As with other Mayan sites, the effect is awesome and mysterious, for so little is known of the civilisation that created them. Why did 200,000 souls suddenly vanish into the jungle? Were the pyramids really for human sacrifice or is that, as some indigena scholars suggest, a myth put about by the invaders to justify the genocide of a cultivated people?

Despite Mexico City's size, it is easy to get about: the Metro and taxis are cheap. The Zona Rossa is the city's Soho, vibrant with bars, nightclubs and restaurants. There are lots of markets, selling handicrafts, vegetables, clothes, vivid pottery, elegant silverwork and well-crafted leather.

Places to stay range from reasonably priced pensions to luxury hotels. The art-deco Hotel Marquis Reforma offers a central location, cool fountains, friendly service and excellent cuisine. The elegant wives and Baywatch bimbos of the Mexican jet-set sweep haughtily in and out, so if you are wearing jeans, make sure the designer label is showing.

Away from the capital, beach resorts such as Acapulco and Cancún cater principally for an American clientele. The backpacker can get around the country by bus. Food is hot and spicy. Stalls everywhere sell tortillas filled with cheese, chicken or anything you fancy. You can eat well on the street, but restaurants often offer a menu del dia for £2 to £3.

New to Mexico is the self-contained luxury "spa" complex, which incorporates health and fitness programmes. An example is the Avandaro Golf and Spa Resort, at Valle de Bravo in the Sierra Madre, with 60 white, adobe villas scattered among hibiscus and jacaranda trees.

The Pacific coast is hot and can be uncomfortably humid. South of Puerto Vallarta, a mini Acapulco, is the hedonistic Las Alamandas. It's expensive but, like the Avandaro, a few nights here could be a lotus-eating interlude in a tour using cheaper places to stay. Some visitors spend their whole time corralled in these well-guarded estates, but to do so misses out on the real challenge of penetrating this flamboyant yet elusive country.

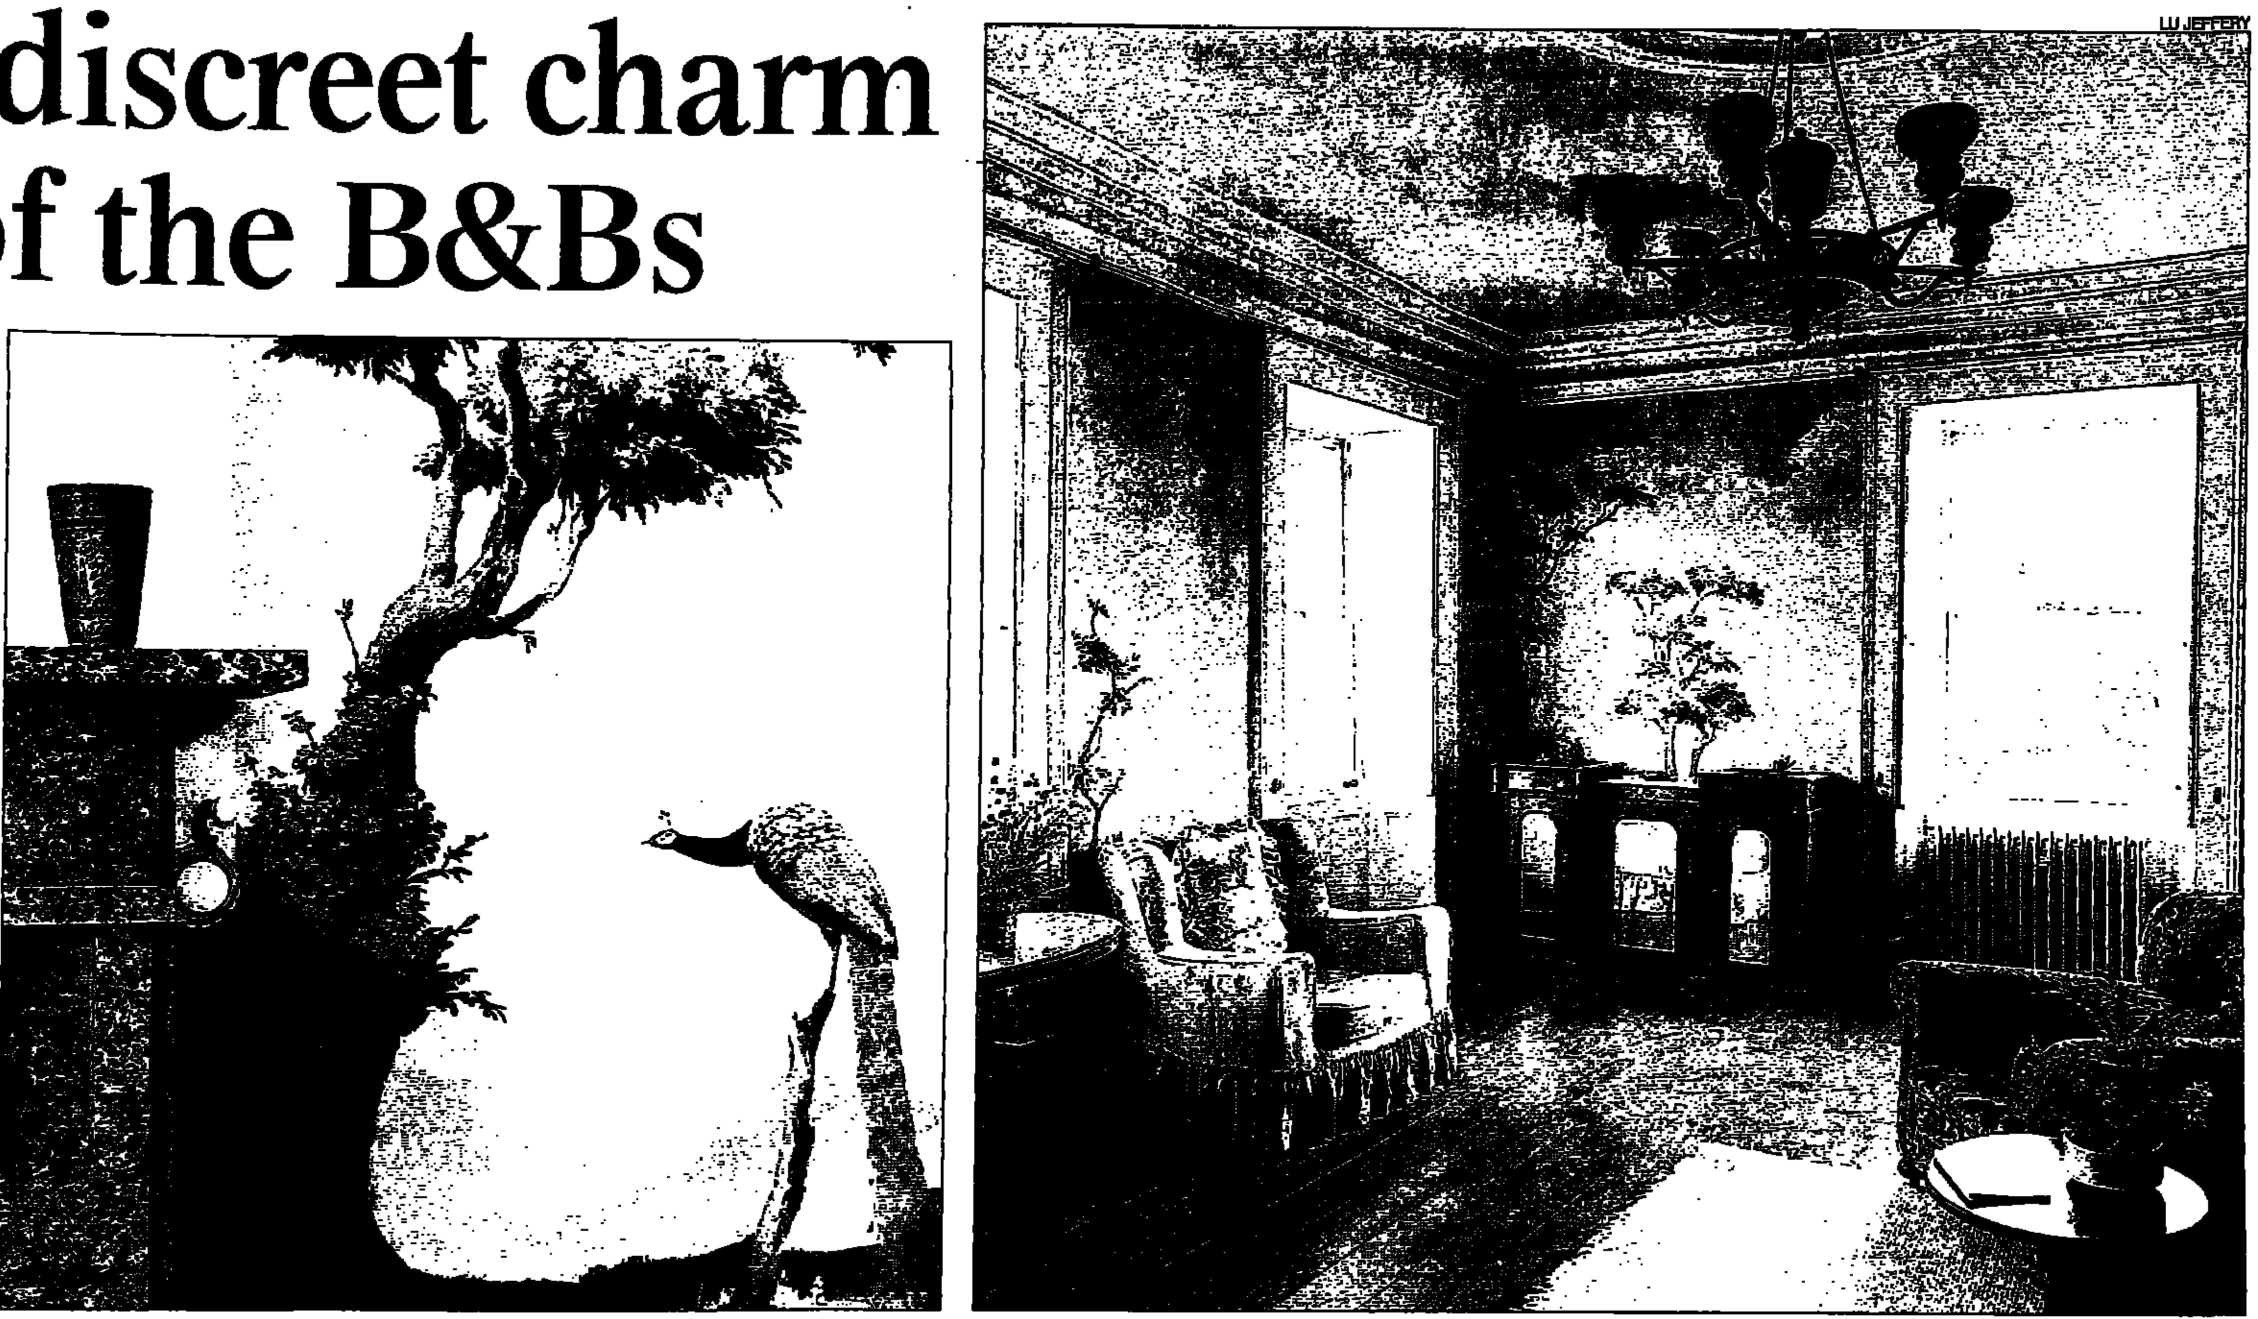
WEEKEND BREAKS: More people are opening their homes to paying guests as a way of earning money

The discreet charm of the B&Bs



LIJ JEFFERY

At Stanshope Hall, in the Peak District of Derbyshire, the large, airy drawing room has flowing moorland scenes, including peacocks and towering trees, painted on its walls and ceilings

Now that largish houses in town and country have joined farmhouses and cottages in taking paying guests, going to B&Bs has become fashionable. In the new-wave B&Bs, you can prowl around the bookshelves, scan family photographs on the grand piano and regimental memorabilia in the hall, try to identify now-famous faces in the school and university group shots in the downstairs lavatory, and wonder if you could dare try such a striking colour combination in the drawing room at home.

Those who open their doors to strangers do so for a variety of reasons: unexpected Lloyd's debts, redundancy, meagre pensions, school fees, high maintenance bills for old properties, low farm incomes; occasionally simply the wish to see a family house alive again.

Women with young children often do B&B because it fits with the household routine. Many of the new-wave come from an armed services' background and are used to meeting people and putting on dinner parties, though not all B&Bs serve evening meals.

There are some pitfalls going to B&Bs: tall people should avoid those enticing thatched cottages with low doorways and solid oak beams. Cottages, by their nature, have small bedrooms, so if you are claustrophobic, check that there is a guests' sitting room or a garden to escape to.

Some old houses have the reverse problem: bedrooms so vast that light and heat barely penetrate the corners, and bathrooms, usually with a claw-foot Victorian bath and brown lino, that are as big as studio flats. Ask about heating before booking.

Although a comfortable B&B costs from £17 to £20 (depending on area), some grand places charge more than £30 per person. Evening meals are between £12 and £20. A few places have liquor licences; with most of the rest you can take your own wine.

The following B&Bs are chosen as much for the personality of the owners as the attraction of their homes. Prices given are per person a night with two people sharing a double room. Longer stays can be better value.

☐ Stanshope Hall, near Ashbourne, Derbyshire (01335 310278).

From £20, dinner £16.50.

The austere, flagged hall and stone staircase lower the spirits a little. But then, the flowing moorland scene, with peacocks and cloudy sky, painted on the drawing room walls and ceiling, and the deep coral dining room, where the pattern of the carpet echoes the ceiling design, are so unexpected and so cheeringly exotic that one is instantly won over.

The previous owner of this listed building was a theatrical set designer, so the three large en-suite bedrooms are just as entertaining. One has Greek columns either side of the window, another has fierce-eyed fish swimming across the bathroom wall. In the big drawing room, where an open fire burns in the Victorian grate, assorted easy chairs promise evenings of entertaining conversation.

Naomi Chambers and Nick Lourie, who chose to do B&B rather than having it forced on them, run their house with a blend of informality and efficiency. As they have two small sons, theirs is a child-friendly house. It is surrounded by the undulating dry-stone walls and rushing streams of the Peak District National Park.

● More large houses in The Good Bed and Breakfast Guide (Consumers' Association, £13.99).

Swingbridge House, on the Grand Union Canal at Nether Heyford, Northamptonshire, is a former boatmen's inn

☐ Waterton Garden Cottage, Ampney Crucis, Gloucestershire (10285 851303).

The minute you walk into the high-ceilinged drawing room, with its soft green carpet, pale coral chairs and sofa, you know you will enjoy your stay. This is a team effort. Mary Cassidy, who is a full-time teacher, was responsible for the decor of this converted Victorian stable block. Her husband, Ian, with a background in catering and hospitality, takes care of the food, which is exceptional. Guests have a complete wing to themselves — drawing room, dining room, breakfast room and three bedrooms (two double, one single) with en-suite shower rooms. Cirencester and all the delights of the Cotswolds are close at hand.

☐ Swingbridge House, Nether Heyford, Northamptonshire (01327 341383).

£27.50, dinner £16.50.

"So many friends came to stay when we moved from Fulham, west London, seven years ago, that we thought we may as well do B&B," says Peta Jacobi, a dab hand at interior design. Even on dull days, reflected light from the Grand Union Canal almost directly outside one of the windows, flickers on the beamed, white ceiling of the long drawing room. Antique furniture, pale fitted carpets, an open inglenook fire and unobtrusive but comfortable armchairs give a restrained English feel to this 200-year-old former canal inn.

All three guest rooms — one small single, two big double with window seats overlooking the canal — are prettily furnished. The "blue bedroom" is particularly attractive. Mrs Jacobi, who made all the curtains and the intricate patchwork quilting, teaches traditional tower-and-roses narrowboat painting.

Althorp, Canons Ashby, Stowe gardens and attractive ironstone villages are to hand.

● The Jacobis are members of Wolsey Lodges, a group of more than 200 grand-to-modest houses offering B&B and dinner (01449 741771).

☐ The Beeches, Carlisle, Cumbria (01228 511962).

This little Georgian gem, a mile from the city centre, is in a road of listed buildings far enough away from the rushing traffic to be quiet. This is another team effort: Heather Kirkpatrick works for Laura Ashley and is responsible for the decor. Bill, who is home all the time, cooks breakfast and runs the house. There are fresh flowers and fruit in the three small, country-style bedrooms and, as there is just one bathroom, rooms have wash-basins. Blue-and-white plates and other family treasures add atmosphere to the dining room.

This would be a good stop for a family with teenage children on the journey north, or for exploring Carlisle.

☐ Pentwyn Farm, Little Mill, Pontypool, Gwent (01495 785249).

£18, dinner £10

Activities and culture are the draw for guests here. Raglan Castle, the Brecon canal, Hay-on-Wye, the Brecon Beacons and the Black Mountains are close by.

Ann and Stuart Bradley, who have three grown-up children, say that their guests include couples escaping city pressures, as well as families.

The outdoor swimming pool in the garden of this 16th-century traditional Welsh longhouse is popular with tourists in summer.

The sitting room is big and comfortable, with a sweetly scented ash fire on cold days, magazines and nice pieces of old furniture. Brass-buttoned chairs and old red glass on deep window ledges in the spacious dining room add to the feeling of well-being. The three smallish en-suite bedrooms are pleasant.

Mrs Bradley is noted for her cooking, so book dinner.

● More inns, farms and guest houses in Wales in Great Little Places (0686 668030).

☐ Leyden House, Mortlake, Surrey (01905 613746).

£108 per person for two nights, dinner, bed and breakfast.

The guests' sitting room in this historic riverside house facing the finish of the Boat Race is almost 40ft long, has a warming, wood-burning stove in a massive Tudor fireplace, old rugs on polished wood floors, a couple of sofas, masses of books and a breakfast table overlooking the garden. The owner, Rachael Keeling, who has two guest bedrooms in her rambling and listed house, is a Lloyd's name and a newcomer to B&B. "I'm enjoying it immensely," she says. "We've always entertained a lot, so it holds no terrors. The guests have acres of space." And so they have. The two large bedrooms, with adjoining bathrooms, occupy the whole floor.

"I tell visitors that we're half way between Heathrow and Harrods," she adds.

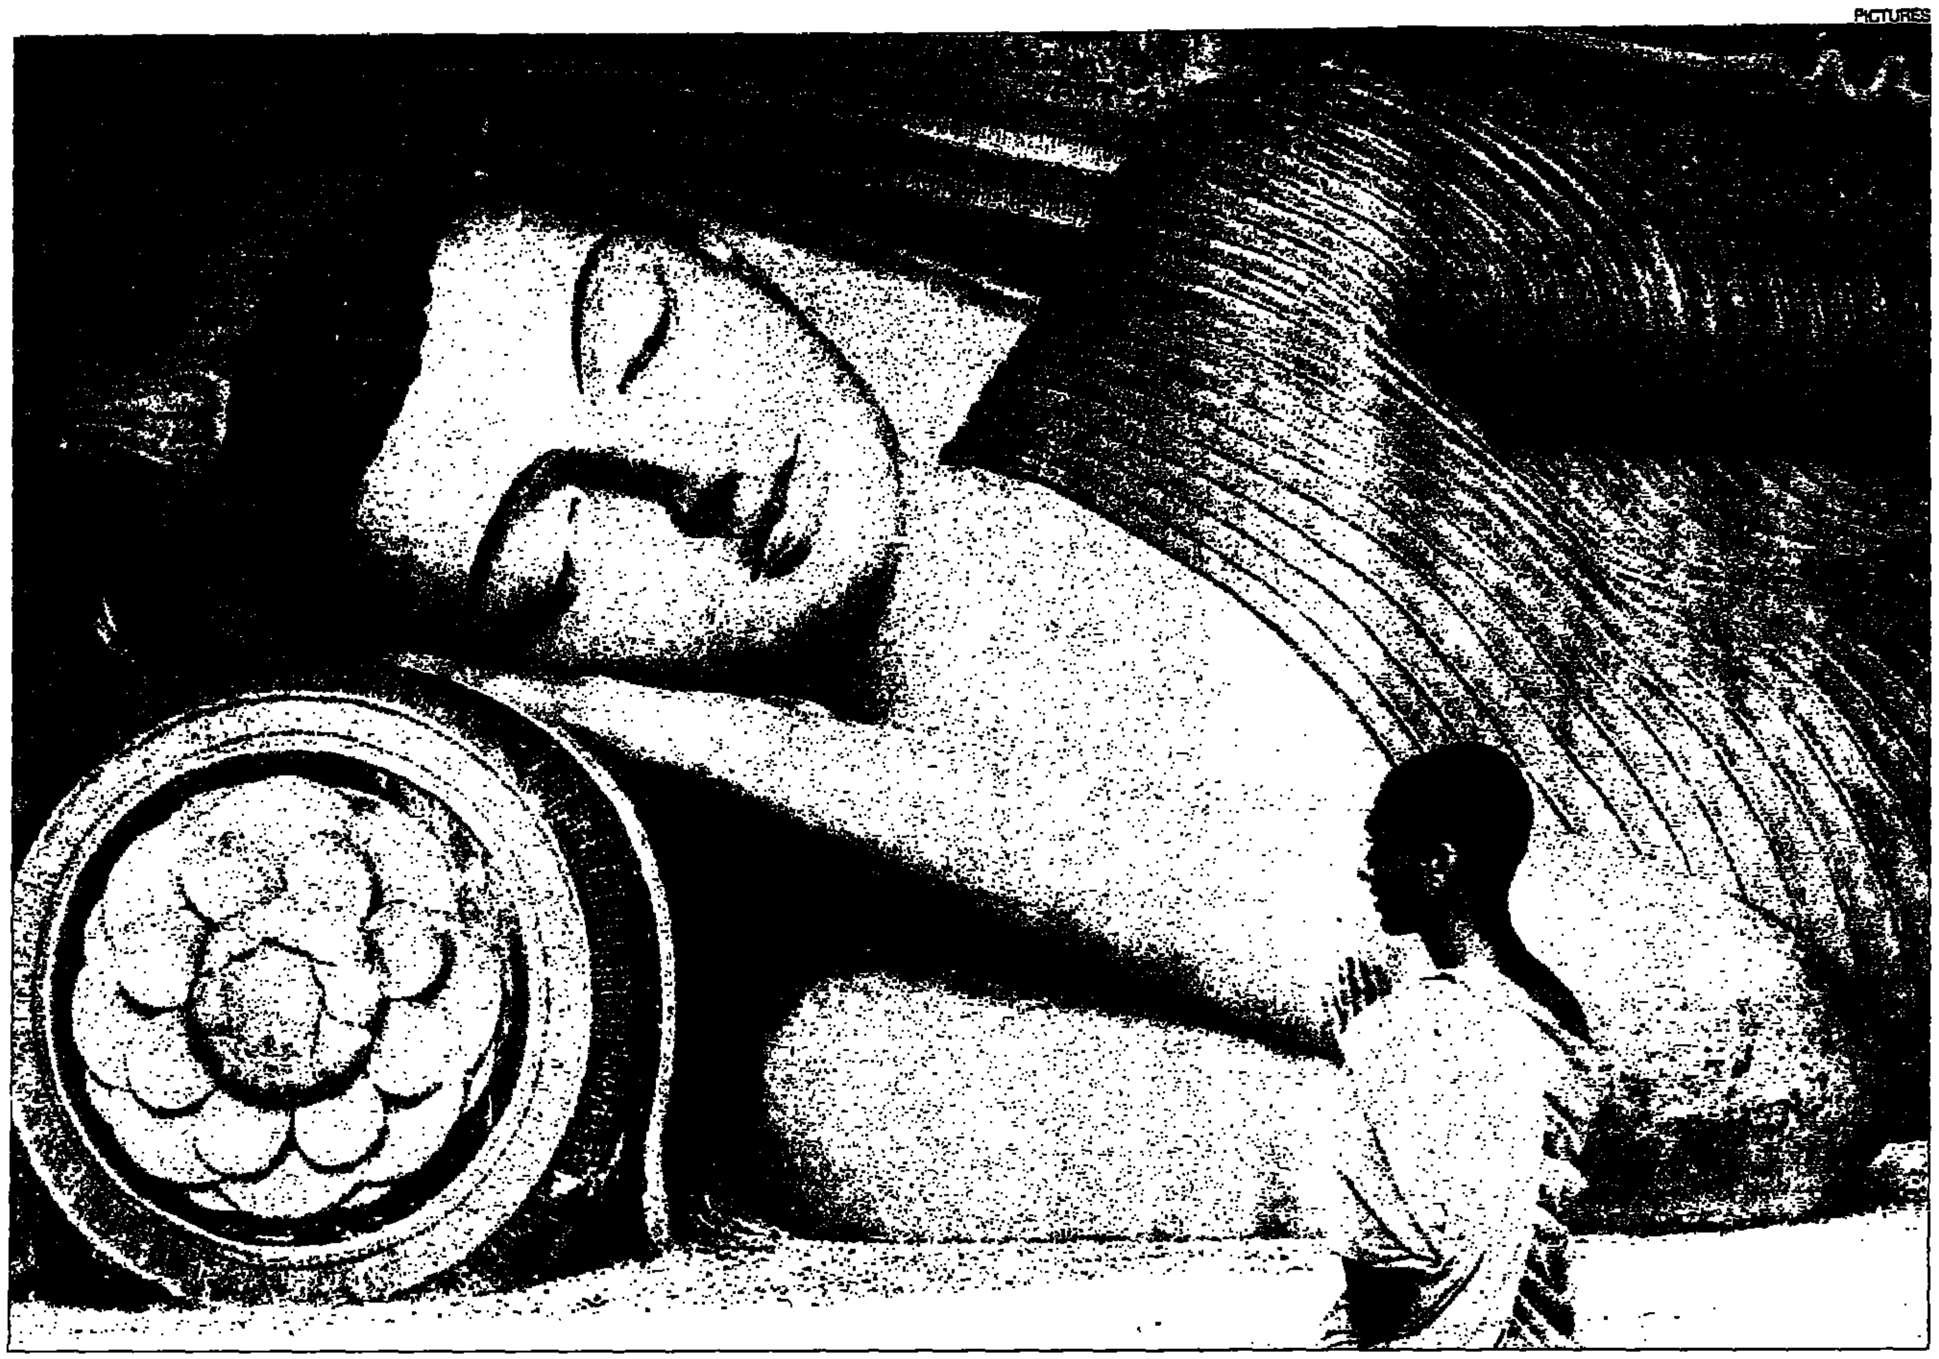
SOUTH-EAST ASIA: A moonlit festival in Sri Lanka and a sleaze-free trip to Pattaya in Thailand



PICTURES

In the 5th century BC, Buddha is said to have visited Sri Lanka three times. On one occasion he went to Kelaniya, which commemorates the event with a great festival every January

A glittering cast of thousands

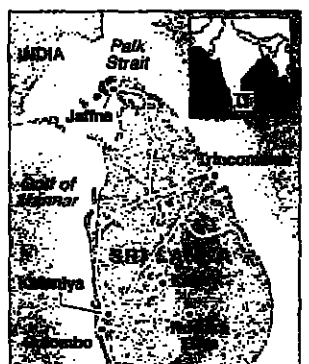
The Mount Lavinia Hotel in Colombo is an old brigadier of a building. Silver-haired and bushy with balustrades, it could have been a seat of colonial government. In the film, Bridge over the River Kwai, it was the military hospital where William Holden convalesced.

Beyond the portico, on the terrace beside the coffee shop, there is a notice of unlikely activities: fortune-telling, fire-walking and elephant rides on the beach. You can get a club sandwich 24 hours a day in the Mount Lavinia but, as in the rest of the country, you will not be served alcohol when the moon is full, in deference to the Buddhist Poya days.

There are two books in every guest room: a Gideon New Testament and The Teaching of Buddha. Sri Lanka never ceases to bounce you between the familiar and the phenomenal. And with a truce now called between the Government and the Tamils in the distant North, tourism is starting to return to this beguiling island.

In the 5th century BC, Buddha is said to have visited Sri Lanka three times. On one of those occasions he came to Kelaniya, a town a few miles east of Colombo. At the full moon every January there is a festival to celebrate the visit. By dusk, a crowd of perhaps 100,000 had gathered along the road at the foot of the temple, and the night air smelt of smoke drifting from the torches lighting the route the procession would take.

Many people had been there hours. Hundreds of families, the children asleep, were spread out on groundsheets in a gently squirming mosaic, waiting for the festivities to begin.



The procession began just before 11pm led by a police car, blue lights flashing, and a white truck with "Sinha Trades" on its side. They were to be the last contact with the familiar until an army lorry brought up the rear almost two hours later. What passed in the meantime belonged strictly to the phenomenal.

In a drumming, dancing, piping, halting parade, lit by torches of burning copra, 40 elephants and 2,000 men snaked slowly by in a sort of spiritual circus. There were men with whips; men twirling long fiery batons; temple officials in shimmering costumes; flag-bearers and fire-eaters and tumblers, and children dancing with a kind of maypole.

There were monks protected by ceremonial umbrellas of gorgeous brocades, and dancers in fantastic helmets, silver and jewelled. There were dignitaries in turbans: more dancers in masks; and men dressed as monkeys, bears and dragons: all passed by to the rattle and thump of 100 drums and the reedy squawk of nalawa flutes.

And there were the elephants, interspersed through the parade, each masked and caped in brilliant embroideries of gold, white, red, orange, yellow, pink, purple and green. The biggest, a great bull, had his head illuminated, like Harrods, in little electric bulbs. He was caparisoned in scarlet and gold, his tusks tasselled and sheathed in silver, and he moved with the dignity of a king.

On his back swayed a turret-shaped howdah containing a Buddhist relic. This too was picked out in lights powered by a little muttering generator being wheeled along behind. A team of attendants laid a continuous path in strips of white cloth for the elephant to walk on, which they rolled up again as soon as he had passed. Apparently old temple elephants refuse to move unless their way is properly carpeted.

In August there is an even greater procession in Kandy, the old capital. It is one of the biggest festivals in Asia, but then Kandy holds the most sacred of all Sri Lanka's relics, the Buddha's tooth. It has its own temple, the Temple of the Tooth, to which five priests and 13 elephants are attached. There the tooth is kept behind bullet-proof glass in a gold reliquary garlanded with jewels. Every day it is offered three meals; every Wednesday it is bathed.

We had come to Kandy by diesel train, waddling down from the lumpy hills, back to the heat and the palm trees. A constant procession of pedestrians stepped off the track to let us pass, the girls shading themselves under umbrellas.

Sri Lanka's Hill Country, shorn of all but a sparse bristle of trees, is upholstered in tea bushes. They grow waist-high as dense as broccoli heads. The Hill Club at Nuwara Eliya was founded by planters in 1895. The billiard table is the original. It stands in its own darkened sanctum beneath a mahogany scoreboard and the rules of Rangoon Snooker, and is almost as revered as the Buddha's tooth. Women were not admitted to the Billiard Room until 1947 and then only on Wednesday nights and by a side door. They were allowed to play on "the second table".

Today the club is a stop for tourists. There are still Room Boys, log fires, a Men's Bar and hot-water bottles in the beds, and jackets and ties must be worn after 7pm. But the food is dreadful and the service amnesiac. Like the society from which it came, the Hill Club has for a 100 years mistaken convention for standards.

Below the tea country we drove through vast valleys of infinite green, brilliantly enamelled with paddy fields. We climbed the 600ft rock stump of Sigiriya, up a kind of dizzy fire escape to the remains of the citadel on the summit. We drank the refreshing milk from coconuts cracked open at the roadside. We marvelled at the ruins of Polonnaruwa, the medieval capital, and at the temple stupas of the even older capital of Anuradhapura, which was the centre of an advanced civilisation 2,500 years ago.

We watched an elephant take her daily bath. She lay on her side in a river of brown water, foppishly waving her trunk as her mahout took two hours to scrub her with a coconut husk.

At the Kothduwa monastery on an island in a lake south of Ahungalla we tiptoed round a class of 50, mainly elderly, women taking instruction in meditation from a monk sitting immobile in front of them. And then, aboard a plastic launch, we bounced back across the water to our hotel and the more frail certainties of the familiar.

Getting there: tours and beaches

☐ The author was a guest of Thomson WorldWide.

☐ The week-long Ceylon Sapphires Tour starts in Colombo and visits Nuwara Eliya, Kandy and Kandalamar, from where there are trips to the ruined capitals. The tour is combined with a week on the coast, either at the Mount Lavinia Hotel in Colombo or further south at the Hotel Triton. From £799 for 14 nights (full board on tour, B&B at the beach).

☐ A cheaper alternative is available from the Thomson Faraway Shores brochure: two weeks at the beach costs from £499 half board. A three-day excursion to Kandy and the tea country with full-board accommodation can be added from £149.

☐ Brochures from travel agents; or the Thomson Holiday Shop. Tel: 0171-707 9000 (London) or 0161-911 9000 (Manchester).

☐ No visas are required for British citizens. Malaria tablets are essential. There are two rainy seasons: late April, May and June and October and November. Winter temperatures: 85F-90F.

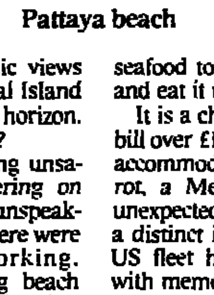
All quiet on the sex front

Pattaya, one of the world's notorious sex capitals, is denigrated regularly in the media for its paedophile rings, absurdly cheap rates for prostitution, and as a haven for criminals, not to mention its badly polluted sea. Which all conjures up the question: "Why should anyone bother to go there on holiday?"

The incentive was an unbeatable two-week special offer costing £489 to fly Qantas, stay at a leading hotel, bask in temperatures of 89F, with the prospect of Thai noodles, good shopping and large swimming pools. I suspected that the reality might be less appealing.

But on arrival in Bangkok, complimentary drinks all the way, we were met by an air-conditioned chauffeur-driven car to speed us the three-hour drive to Pattaya. Had some mistake been made? This smacked of first-class service, not a cheap deal.

Even the hotel was not the Oriental dive I had anticipated. The Asia is set outside Pattaya in tropical gardens overrun with bougainvillea, and palms full of mynah birds. Meandering through the heart of these grounds is a swimming pool with a submerged bar. The options continue: on one side a nine-hole golf course, on the other a downhill walk through yet more exotic plant life to a beach with panoramic views across the bay to Coral Island anchored on the horizon. Where was the sleaze?



Pattaya beach

I had been expecting unsavory characters loitering on the beach offering unspeakable services. True, there were countless hard-working, friendly Thais selling beach bags, watches and wallets, but the most personal service on offer was a manicure costing 100 baht (£2.60).

There was a flourishing beach culture: small restaurants, looking curiously makeshift, produced exceptional noodle and curry dishes laced with fresh basil and chilli at prices never above £3; the beer was cold, and your personal deckchair and umbrella set you back 50 pence a day. By midday the beach — with not a trace of pollution — was a jigsaw of sun-worshippers from every continent, interspersed with low-key hagglers selling the latest Ray Ban or Rolex lookalikes.

This did not match expectation. Where was the vice? It was, in fact, seven minutes by open taxi to notorious downtown Pattaya, affectionately known as "The Strip". Here, more than 400 beer bars exude the transient appeal of the fairground, all trying to entice lonely male punters with bevies of scantily clad girls battling bravely to sell one drink.

The flashing neon lights, the bizarre range of clubs and go-go dancing establishments, and the wandering tourists simply merge into a multi-coloured blur of strobe lighting and terribly loud music. Gratification seemed a fading dream — the go-go dancers had no rhythm and looked deeply bored propping up podium poles supposedly designed for more wicked antics.

This particular sex capital had a distinctly U-certificate feel. Where else could you find Ronald McDonald and giant pink bears jostling with the prostitutes for tourist trade? Clearly the Government's clean-up progamme was having some effect. But as one old Pattaya hand — an expatriate busy building golf courses — told me: "With this place you simply see what you choose. It's all here, it just depends what you are looking for." That is probably true.

For the "ordinary" visitor or family, happy to explore the beaches, the prolific markets, street stalls, gem shops and tailors, there was little to cause serious offence — most disconcerting were the mountains of deep-fried locusts and beetles, a Thai snack enjoyed at sunset on the pier.

The decision where to eat each night was never easily agreed upon. For exceptional Thai food, the PIC Kitchen (on Soi 5) is reminiscent of a shrine garden, a setting which contrasts vividly with the Nang Nual on "The Strip", where you single out live seafood to be cooked for you, and eat it under the stars.

It is a challenge to run up a bill over £10, and every taste is accommodated. The Blue Parrot, a Mexican diner, is an unexpected time warp, giving a distinct impression that the US fleet has just pulled out with mementos from the Vietnam War on the walls. For those in need of discipline, The Classroom offers an appropriately corrective service.

Ironically, the all-consuming passion in this sinful city appears not to be the Thai belle or boy but the giant motorcycle, on hire for next to nothing. Two-tone Harley Davidsons seemed the answer to most male dreams. With many riders sporting only shorts and no crash helmet you know you are a long way from home.

WHERE'S THE MOST Valuable HOUSE IN AMERICA?
2.30pm July 12, 1994
Charlottesville, Virginia.
Standing at the gas station, I asked about the most expensive real estate in America. "You're holding it," came the reply.
Jefferson's dream home, Monticello, was stamped on the back of the nickel resting in my palm. I'd meant to visit it days ago.
But in an area where everything's cheap and views are free you get distracted. First by the spectacular Shenandoah Valley. Then the prehistoric Luray Caverns. Not to mention soaring with Lindbergh at the Air & Space Museum in Washington D.C!
I'll get to Monticello tomorrow. I hope. Maybe I'll stay another week. Now there's a capital idea.
"A light snack in Maryland after a heavy day's sightseeing."
"We found ourselves racing into the past in Williamsburg, Virginia at a steady 8mph."
"Arriving at Washington D.C.'s biggest party we felt a little underdressed."
Yes, I want to get the full story. Please send my free copy of the Capital Region, USA Travel Guide 1995 P.O. Box 52, St Leonards on Sea, East Sussex, TN38 9TY or call 0345 697236.

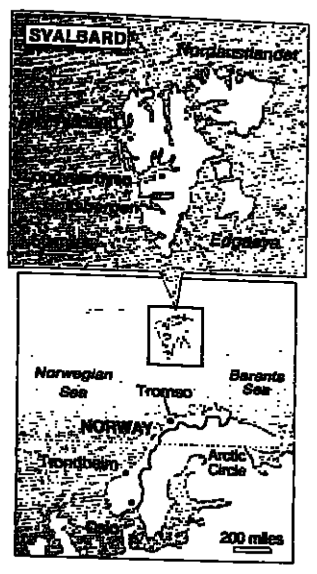
NORWAY: Cruising within the Arctic Circle, the natural beauty more than compensates for the chill factor

Wandering in a winter wonderland



PLANET EARTH

From the deck of the cruise ship you can see seals, reindeer, puffins, Arctic terns, guillemots and even walrus, which, in the water, look like pieces of cumbersome driftwood

Svalbard is an island group about 400 miles north of the Norwegian mainland and within the Arctic Circle. Two-thirds of the landscape is covered permanently by snow and ice, there are no trees and little flora. For four months of the year the sun never goes down, and for three months it never rises. The area has an average temperature of about 5C/41F (it can drop to below -30C/-22F in winter, but rises to 21C/70F in summer). Its population is about 1,100.

Such a place may not seem an obvious destination for a summer holiday but, after joining a three-day cruise around the Nordic fiords last August, I can recommend it.

I flew from Gatwick to Oslo with the Norwegian airline Braathens, taking connecting flights to Trondheim and Tromso, where our party spent the night before flying on to Longyearbyen, the administrative centre of Svalbard on the island of Spitzbergen, where the cruise began. The total flying time was about 6½ hours.

Longyearbyen is a mining town and is encased in snow and ice for most of the year. The houses are wooden and painted in bright pinks, mauves and yellows to jolly things up but, to be honest, the place is still remarkably ugly. However, its proximity to the Arctic wilderness means that tourism is a growing industry.

The hotel we stayed in was sumptuous, and the welcome very warm, but there is only one local bar and the tourist office's boast of the town's great nightlife and variety is a touch exaggerated.

My travelling companions all said they loved Longyearbyen. I thought it looked like a mining village surrounded by beach huts, and I was happy to leave it behind for the shipboard delights of the Nordstjernen.

These proved to be of the comfortable rather than the luxurious or flashy variety. Warm, cosy and designed to take no more than 80 passengers (most of them Norwegian couples aged over 55), the ship had a bar, small shop and separate smoking and non-smoking lounges. There was no gym, disco or cabaret, as it's not that sort of ship or trip. Because you are there to sightsee in inhospitable temperatures, what you need above all else is plenty of heat and good food, and these are in ample supply.

The Norwegians have a refreshingly healthy attitude to food — no namby-pamby nouvelle cuisine — and the ship's fare, which is included in the price of the trip, was superb. Not so the alcohol: two small beers and two gin-and-tonics cost £10. The cheapest bottle of wine (Chilean red) was £16 a litre, and it tasted more like paint-stripper. Perhaps that's why my companions' requests for a second bottle were met with surprise.

The ship's cabins were a little cramped. I had a "super-deluxe" one, but even this was not much bigger than the average two-berth cabin on a cross-Channel ferry, although the shower was powerful and hot. (Talking of heat, do not listen to anyone, especially a Norwegian, who tells you that it isn't really cold within the Arctic Circle. It is cold. Take thermal underwear and lots of layers. If you don't you will freeze.) The temperature was a generous 2C/28F when we were there, but the wind-chill factor takes all temperatures down by about 20C.

> ‘The Svalbard landscape is so bewitching that most of us spent nearly all our time on deck’

What do you do there for three days? Well, the Svalbard landscape is so bewitching that most of us spent nearly all our time on deck. The scenery is staggeringly diverse. In places, the mountains either side of the fiords look like Alps flooded up to their snow-capped peaks with Indian ink. Sometimes they resemble the Scottish highlands: great lumps of imposing, gritty, hostile granite. Then there are those so rich in iron ore that they are a startling brilliant orange; they look as if they have been accidentally transplanted into the Arctic from the central Australian desert, to burn the eye grown used to pearly hues and assault the imagination which has never equated ice and water with hot, fiery colours.

Not all the sightseeing takes place from the ship. On the last day of the cruise we disembarked for a morning at Ny-Alesund, the most northerly settlement in the world. Once a thriving village and home to the explorer Roald Amundsen, it is now a scientific research station, with a curious bleak charm. Eighty people live there in the summer, 20 in the long, pitch-black winter, examining algae from the fiords and walking the few hundred yards between buildings armed with guns against possible attacks from hungry polar bears.

The thought of seeing polar bears in the wild is one of the most seductive prospects for travellers considering a trip to the Arctic. Alas, they are elusive creatures, and the only ones we saw were those killed and stuffed (before the species protection laws were enforced), and gracing the lobbies of the larger hotels.

However, our ship was encircled day and night by incredibly animated birds, which I took for common gulls until I was told they were small albatross. We also saw seals, reindeer, puffins, Arctic terns, guillemots and even walrus, albeit from a distance. They looked like pieces of cumbersome driftwood to the naked eye (remember to take your binoculars).

Do not go to Svalbard expecting to see bears or to be entertained by gangs of feuding walrus. Go knowing that the glaciers, icebergs, pristine air and, above all, the resounding silence between them provide the traveller with extraordinary beauty, peace and restoration to the eye, heart and mind.

One night when the ship was temporarily anchored I stood alone on the deck, for once uninterrupted by the whirring and clicking of camera shutters, and gazed for miles and miles across cracked, icy vistas, stabbed at curious angles by shards of soft, low light.

It was a view beyond which it was impossible to imagine the sight and sound of a busy world, and certainly to remember that such a world held any fear.

CHRISTINE WHEELER

Dr Thomas Stuttaford reviews a book for travellers

Your very good health

NEARLY 15 years ago The Times consulted various medical insurance companies and air-ambulance agencies as part of a survey on where it was as safe to be taken ill as it would be in Britain.

Overseas medicine has improved immeasurably since then, and conditions have slipped over here. In many parts of the world at that time, the standards of comfort and care in some hospitals wouldn't have surprised William Howard Russell, The Times' Crimean war correspondent, who owed part of his fame to the exposure of conditions at the hospital at Scutari before Florence Nightingale took charge.

The Times survey conclusions were considered too alarming for publication without much more detailed research to substantiate them, but the statistics, such as they were, suggested that in many countries to which the British flocked it would be safer, when possible, to fly home than to seek local treatment.

Even the doctors usually recommended locally as the ones best suited for treating travellers practised a style of medicine rather different from that in Harley Street or the Mayo Clinic. The possession of a British qualification didn't necessarily guarantee that the standards demanded by the Royal Colleges when the doctors were examined in their youth would still be adhered to many years later.

Travellers can, however, buy their tickets with an easy mind, for the great majority of people who go overseas, even to the notoriously less hygienic parts of the world, do so without grave medical problems.

A guide to health, Stay Healthy Abroad, by Rob Ryan, deputy travel editor of The Sunday Times, is encouraging. Only 0.04 per cent of travellers to the tropics will need to be admitted to hospital, 0.06 per cent evacuated by air ambulance, and only one in 100,000 will, as Ryan says, "make some small corner of that foreign field forever his (or her) own".

Far better to avoid trouble than confront it. The old maxim that time spent in reconnaissance is seldom wasted applies as much to travel as to war. Time spent reading Ryan's book would certainly not be wasted, whether the intended journey is to some Mediterranean watering spot or to central Africa as a VSO worker. This book will reduce even those small chances of falling prey to serious infections, or avoidable accidents.

Ryan deals in detail with the kit needed, the immunisations required, and all the other preparations needed to withstand the overseas lifestyle, which is described region by region and country by country in places as different as Denmark and Turkmenistan.

The book is written in an easy, light style, medical facts are quoted with humour and without pomposity and his sources of information are excellent.

I shall keep my copy in my consulting rooms — it's important for doctors to have read what their patients are reading and I suspect that this book will become a favourite with travellers.

- Stay Healthy Abroad, by Rob Ryan (Health Education Authority, £7.99).

WORD-WATCH

ANDROCONIUM

(a) Usually in the plural androconia, scales on the wings of certain male Lepidoptera from which the attractive scent of the male is diffused, from the Greek anēr, andros a male + konia dust. "The flocculent yellow androconial hairs which line the interior of the pocket and which doubtless emit a smell attractive to the female."

ELODEA

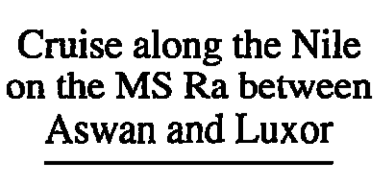
(c) A member of the small genus of aquatic plants, belonging to the family Hydrocharidacea and native to temperate America, cultivated in aquaria and pools. "Elodea, the moss-like weed in most American goldfish bowls, yielded from 12 to 14 tons green weight to the acre in a Kansas pond."

BOSTHOON

(a) An awkward fellow, a tactless, senseless person, from the Irish bastún, a whip made of green rods, a soft or spiritless fellow. James Joyce, Dubliners, 1914: "Is this what we pay rates for? To feed and clothe these ignorant bostoons [sic]!"

GALIGNANI

(b) Colloquial appellation of the English-language newspaper Galignani's Messenger, founded in 1814 and published daily in Paris until 1884 (and continued until 1904 as the Daily Messenger), eponym from the name of its founder, Giovanni Antonio Galignani, 1752-1821. George Eliot, letter of 1868: "We have been chiefly in regions innocent even of Galignani."



A Week on THE NILE

Travellers are flooding back into Egypt but prices have not yet caught up with demand. During the course of 1994 we were able to secure some extraordinarily low prices for a superior product which have been carried over into 1995. This successful and popular journey, based on the first-class MS Ra Nile cruiser, will now be continued for the majority of this year.

This tour represents extraordinary value for money since the tariff includes all meals, transfers, guides and excursions. If you are looking for a true escape with that magical combination of culture and relaxation, then this is surely an opportunity that should not be missed.

The MS Ra

Constructed in Britain the MS Ra is a large purpose-built Nile cruiser that can accommodate up to 140 passengers. She is an excellently designed, sleek vessel offering all the benefits of modern high technology. The facilities on board include a large restaurant, lounge, bar, sun viewing deck with a swimming pool, jacuzzi, and a small health club. The cabin accommodation is bright and airy with large French-style windows which open to offer splendid views of the banks of the Nile. All the cabins are fully air-conditioned and have private bathrooms.

Cruise along the Nile on the MS Ra between Aswan and Luxor

7 nights from £395.00

Itinerary

Day 1 Depart from London Gatwick in the morning for Aswan. On arrival join the MS Ra. Dinner and overnight on board.

Day 2 Depart in the early hours for Edfu and visit the temple. In the afternoon sail to Esna.

Day 3 Visit the temple with its hypostyle halls. Return to the vessel and sail to Luxor. In the afternoon visit the Temple of Karnak and the Temple of Luxor.

Day 4 Visit the Valley of the Kings on the west bank at Thebes and the Mortuary Temple of Queen Hatshepsut at Deir el-Bahari. In the afternoon take a guided tour of Luxor Museum.

Day 5 Return to the Valley of the Kings before returning to the MS Ra and cruising to Edfu to moor overnight.

Day 6 Sail to Kom Ombo to see the Ptolemaic temple then cruise to Aswan. Visit the High Dam, the ancient granite quarries of the Pharaohs and the Temple of Philae.

Day 7 There is an optional morning excursion by air to Abu Simbel (£120). Sail by felucca to Kitchener Island to visit the lush botanical gardens.

Day 8 Morning at leisure. Transfer to Aswan airport for the flight back to London Gatwick.

THIS SUPERB TOUR will take you to the ancient crossroads of Europe and Asia; a magnet for traders, invaders and travellers through the centuries.

Starting in Istanbul, our itinerary combines the rich culture of Turkey, with a relaxing stay on the glorious Aegean coast. Standards of accommodation are excellent with half-board included throughout.

The first day takes you on a tour of the most fabulous sights; the Suleymaniye Mosque, the most impressive of Ottoman mosques; the spectacular Topkapi Palace with its courtyards, pavillions and harem boasts an unbelievable collection of jewels and treasures.

Our second full day reveals the colour and aroma of the Spice Market and the myriad attractions of the Grand Bazaar, which is the largest covered market in the world. We'll visit the Byzantine cathedral of Hagia Sophia before ending with an unforgettable cruise on the Bosphorus.

Time to relax...

Now your holiday changes pace as we travel to Bursa, once capital of the Ottoman Empire; and then on to the popular resort of Kusadasi.

Here you can relax on the beaches, and in the bars and restaurants, before a full day's tour to Ephesus. Dating back to 1000BC, this is one of the greatest of ancient cities.

Choose from two exciting optional tours - the hot springs at Pamukkale, or a relaxing cruise aboard a traditional Turkish boat. We then turn inland to Bergama and Pergamon, an ancient Greek city perched high above the town.

We visit the evocative site of Troy, immortalised by Homer's legend, and then cross the Dardanelles for a brief stop at Gallipoli.

This excellent tour will leave you richly endowed with memories and images of a truly magnificent and historic land.

A HOLIDAY WITH A DIFFERENCE... a Ramblers Holiday. All walking-based, and carefully graded so there's usually something to suit everyone. Operating on all five continents in small parties, each with their own leader, you could sightsee in Europe, trek in Nepal or around Mont Blanc, walk in the USA, explore China and the Far East, New Zealand, Canada or Britain's Lake District.
Ramblers - rather different from the usual package holidays - with 130 destinations and over 1500 departures.

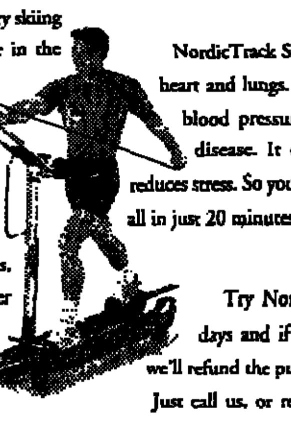
Now from the USA: The world's best aerobic workout.



According to fitness experts, cross-country skiing is one of the best forms of aerobic exercise in the world. And nothing gives you the total body health benefits of cross-country skiing like NordicTrack Ski.

A total workout

It fights flab like nothing else. Unlike exercise bikes, treadmills and step machines, which ignore the 65% of muscles in the upper half of the body, NordicTrack Ski tones up every major muscle group, making you leaner and firmer all over.

In your upper body it works the muscles of the back, arms, shoulders and stomach, while lower down it works hips, buttocks, thighs and calves. What's more, NordicTrack Ski's rhythmic motion is smooth, safe and non-jarring.

Total fitness

NordicTrack Ski also helps to strengthen your heart and lungs. It lowers cholesterol levels and blood pressure, reducing the risk of heart disease. It even boosts your energy and reduces stress. So you feel full of life and vitality. And all in just 20 minutes three times a week.

30 day home trial

Try NordicTrack Ski at home for 30 days and if the results don't impress you, we'll refund the purchase price.

GAMES

CHESS

by Raymond Keene

The World Chess Federation semi-finals in Sanghi Nagar, India are over. Karpov, the reigning FIDE champion, triumphed over Gelfand, but in the other match Kamsky utterly demolished Salov, not conceding a single loss against one of the world's highest-ranked players.

To say that Kamsky has greatly improved over the past year would be a gross understatement. In former times, I regarded him as a grandmaster with a robotic, persistent, yet ultimately unimaginative style. The beauty, elegance and power that characterise the best games of Kasparov were notably lacking in the creations of the more pedestrian Kamsky. Now all this has changed. In Sanghi Nagar, Kamsky achieved the soaring style of Bobby Fischer himself. His play was not just effective but also aesthetic, as the following fine win demonstrates.

White: Kamsky: Black: Salov
Sanghi Nagar, 1995, Game 4

1	d4	d5	2	c4	e6
3	Nc3	Be7	4	Nf3	Nf6
5	Bg5	h6	6	Bh4	Nbd7
7	e3	0-0	8	Rc1	c6
9	Bd3	dxc4	10	Bxc4	b5
11	Bd3	a6	12	a4	bxa4

A well-analysed line of the queen's gambit declined, but quite how well-analysed will only become apparent at a later stage. If instead 12 ... b4 13 Ne4 Nxe4 14 Bxe7 Nxf2 15 Bxd8 Nxd1 16 Kxd1 Rxd8 17 Rxc6 with some advantage to White in the endgame as in Capablanca-Rossolimo, Paris 1938.

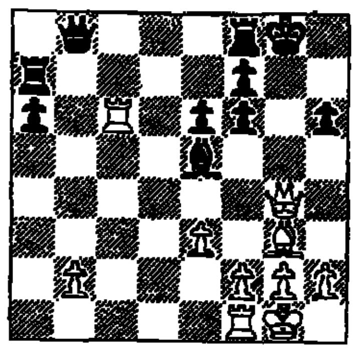
13	Nxa4	Qa5+	14	Nd2	Bb4
15	Nc3	c5	16	Nb3	Qd8
17	0-0	cxd4	18	Nxd4	Bb7
19	Be4	Qb8

This position occurred in the 12th match game between Fischer and Spassky at Reykjavik 1972. At that time Fischer continued with 20 Bg3, which permitted Black eventually to make a draw. Kamsky is ready with an improvement on that game but, as we shall see, White's 20th move is by no means the last of his theoretical refinements.

20 Nc6 Bxc6 21 Bxc6 Ra7 22 Bg3 Ne5 23 Qd4. This is considerably more aggressive than 23 Qe2 Bd6 24 Rfd1 Bc7 25 Ne4 Neg4, with equality as in the game Agzamov-Georgadze, Taskent 1984.

23 ... Bd6 24 Ne4. A further vigorous stroke. The interpolation 24 Rfd1 Bc7 and only now 25 Ne4 is rendered harmless by 25 ... Nh5, as in Pinter-Martin, Linz 1984.

24 ... Nxc6 25 Nxf6+ gxf6 26 Rxc6 Be5 27 Qg4+



Amazingly, this is the first new move of the game, and it is a finesse which gives White a virtually overwhelming position. Salov had been relying on an old analysis by the Georgian Grandmaster Georgadze, which gave only 27 Bxe5 fxe5 28 Qh4 Kh7 29 Qe4+ Kg7 30 f4 exf4 31 Rxf4 Qxb2, when Black can defend himself. By retaining bishops on the board, Kamsky dramatically increases his chances of attack.

27 ... Kh7 28 Qe4+ Kg7 29 f4 Bc7. If 29 ... Bxb2, both 30 f5 and 30 Rb1 retain White's initiative.

30 Be1 Qb5. It is always dangerous to take the b-pawn with the queen, but in this case it would be fatal, e.g. 30 ... Qxb2 31 Bc3 Qb5 32 Rf3 Bd8 33 Rg3+ Kh8 34 Rc8 e5 35 Rh3 Kg7 36 Qf5 exf4 37 Rc5 Qe2 38 Qg5+ and wins.

31	Rf3	Rd8	32	Rg3+	Kh8
33	h3	Qd5	34	Qc2	Bd6.

Black's case is hopeless, for if 34 ... Bb8, then 35 Bc3 Be5 36 Bxe5 fxe5 37 Qf5 and White wins.

35 e4 Black resigns.

After 35 ... Qd4+, 36 Bf2 wins material, while any other move with the queen on move 35 allows Rxd6 followed by Qc8+.

WINNING MOVE

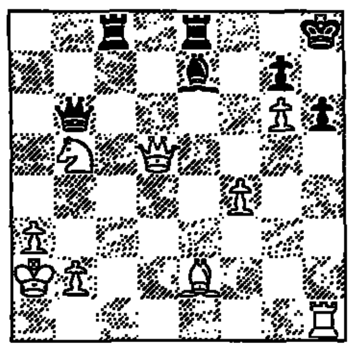
By Raymond Keene

This week's positions are all taken from Garry Kasparov's Puzzle Book (Cadogan £8.99). This position is from the game Lputian - Maahs, Antwerp 1993. The black king appears quite safe, but White proved that this is not the case. What is the fastest way to win?

Send your answers on a postcard to The Times, 1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN. The first three correct answers drawn on Thursday will win a British Chess Magazine publication. The answer will be published next Saturday.

Last week's solution: 1 Qxh6+

Last week's winners: M S Gavin, *Cambridge; J J Gill, Ramsey, Isle of Man; E Kohlmorgen, Alder*shot, Hants.



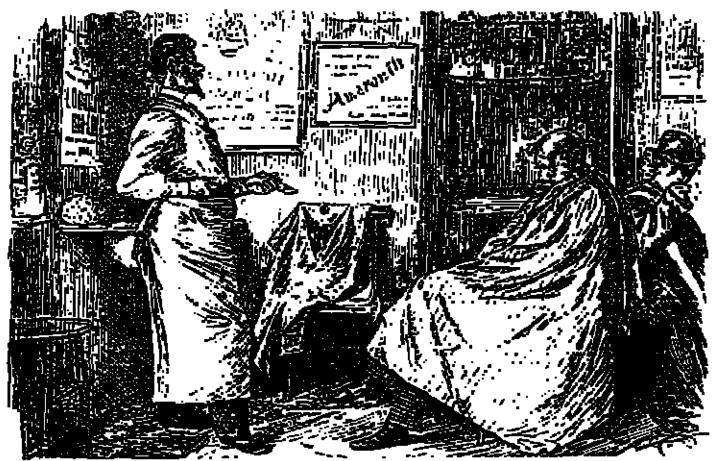
PUNCHLINE

READERS are invited to write an amusing caption for the cartoon on the right. The cartoon, from the Punch library, includes the contemporary caption.

The cartoon will be printed again next week on the Games page with a caption selected from those submitted.

Caption suggestions, on a postcard please, should be addressed to: Cartoon caption 47, Weekend Games Page, The Times, 1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN. The editor's decision is final.

The closing date for entries is Wednesday, March 8.



"THE UNKINDEST CUT OF ALL."

Haircutter. "U—M——WELL, SIR —I SHOULD 'ESITATE BEFORE I SACRIFICED MY HONLY HORNAMENT!!"

Heard in Kensington Palace Gardens
"Pst! Agents of influence!"

The winning caption for last week's cartoon (above) was submitted by Lt Col W. R. Lawson of Newnham Bridge, Hereford and Worcester

COMPUTER GAMES

FOOTBALL titles have established a firm foothold in the games market. Perhaps the most sophisticated of the genre is Gremlin Interactive's "Premier Manager 3", now available for PC and CD-Rom, as well as the Amiga.

This is a football management game and, long before kick-off at the first friendly, you are hiring, firing and training players, improving the ground and looking for those all-important sponsors. But a knowledge of, or even enthusiasm for, the sport is not necessary: this is as much a business sim as anything else.

Am enthusiast of the title is Mr Sartain from Liverpool, who was our sixth winner in Cyberspace Twelve, the results of which were announced last week. Mr Sartain succinctly summed up its obsessive qualities thus: "Management games are often associated with the anorak brigade who actually need to get a life," he wrote. "But this game can take over. All the time you're working out team tactics: should the winger have a more attacking role or is the defence playing flat?"

The success of "Premier Manager 3" is no fluke shot. Gremlin Interactive's original title was good, the sequel was slightly better but it is this tightened and titillated third version which undoubtedly establishes them as masters of the art.

New choices include hiring an assistant manager to help with the day-to-day running of the club, as well as revised options for training, tactics and playing the transfer market. As always, you have the choice of seeing a match as a blur or painstakingly played out.

YOU start in the conference league, with little budget and a hotch-potch of players and personnel (scouts, trainers and coaches). These each rate fair or good, but by juggling your opportunities the aim is to build up a club of individuals rated supreme and world class. That's the aim, in any case.

In reality, getting higher than the second division will ta[illegible] more than a week of late nights a[illegible] the game engine calling the [illegible]nots is so precise. Some of the goals are linked not only to the players' capabilities but to your own as a manager. Forgetting to spot a better coach or new sponsor between matches can tip the balance of the game and you with it into an unpleasant downward spiral. Hypersensitive bosses fire without warning if their faith in you wanes: then it's goodbye Manchester United: hello Merthyr Tydfil.

The game, which is for one or two players, costs £25.99 (Amiga versions) or £34.99 (PC and CD-Rom), but £20 gives you the latest version of "goal94" by mail order from New Era Software (0131-333 4958), in which six or more managers can compete simultaneously.

New Era brought us Wizard's witty "Rockstar" but "goal94" is no similar masterpiece. The graphics are so jarring that you need to play the game wearing a pair of sunglasses indoors and that makes you look like a celebrity or a spot welder.

Only a hardened cynic might argue that all these games are still for the life-evading anorak brigade as, in essence, all one really does is endlessly rearrange a list.

BRIDGE

BRITISH TEAMS

THE British Bridge League has announced its teams for the 1995 European Championship, to be played in Portugal in June. The Open Team is John Armstrong and Graham Kirby, Andrew Dyson and Glyn Liggins, and Gerald and Stuart Tredinnick. David Price is "npc" (non-playing captain). The Women's Team is Pat Davies and Nicola Smith, Sandra Landy and Michele Handley, and Kay Preddy and Jill Casey. The first three of the team have all won the world championship. Their npc is Tony Priday, about the best captain I have played under.

The surprising omission from the Open Team is that of Tony Forrester and Andrew Robson, Britain's only undisputed world-class pair. This is because Forrester will be playing in the trials for the USA Team. The rules governing eligibility in international bridge are rather more lax than those of, say, football; if you have appropriate residential qualifications and have not played for another country in the last four years, you can change allegiance. Both Forrester and Robson play a lot of bridge in the USA, on "sponsored" teams. These are teams in which the sponsor pays the others on the team to play with him. The going rate for the best players to play in an American national tournament (of which there are three a year, each taking about a week) is around $10,000. Payment for the more minor events is less, but a top professional can work every week of the year if he or she wishes. Bobby Wolff, the former president of the World Bridge Federation, told me that there are at least a dozen players in the USA making $100,000 a year.

If there is anyone in this country making that sort of money out of playing bridge I would be surprised. So, not unnaturally, our best players will spend much of their playing time in the USA.

Forrester's probable team-mates for the US Trials will be Mahmood-Rosenberg, Martell-Stansby, and Seymon-Deutsch. The latter four won the Rosenblum Cup at the Pairs Olympiad in Alberquerque last October. This is one of the three team events to carry the tag of being a World Championship (the others being the Team Olympiad, and the most prestigious, the Bermuda Bowl).

SLAM BIDDING

IT IS a general principle of slam bidding that you should be sure that your trump suit is sound. So in potential slam auctions: (a) be wary of bidding bad suits when you have a good hand; (b) be careful when co-operating with slam tries if you have poor support. Eric Kokish reports this hand from the final of the Rosenblum, in which the American team played against the Polish national team: Stansby was North, Balicki East, Martel South and Zmudzinski West.

1 A "splinter". As I have mentioned before, most tournament players have the agreement that an "unusual" jump shows a singleton or void.
2 This is the point at which the auction went off the rails. Stansby's trumps, although adequate for playing in game, were much too weak to allow him to co-operate in a slamming sequence. His 4 NT took control of the sequence — it was asking for aces.
3 This apparently showed a void in diamonds and only one of the five "aces" (the four aces plus the king of trumps).
4 After the 5 NT response, North could see that Six Hearts would be at best on a finesse for the king of trumps. So rather late in the day he tried to shift to another suit. He hoped South would pass Six Clubs and that he could discard some losing hearts on South's presumed good spades.
5 Unfortunately South interpreted North's Six Clubs as a grand slam try, seeking help in the club suit. As he had the critical the queen of clubs, he considered that was what was needed for Seven Hearts.
6 Technically asking for an unusual lead, but containing an element of insurance.

West obediently led a club which East ruffed. West must have hoped that he would also score his king of hearts, but East laid down the ace of hearts at trick two. I've never seen a Polish bridge player blush, but East might have succumbed on this occasion.

Let me remind you again, this was the bidding and play in the final of a World Championship. It is a good illustration of what Hamman said in an interview in The Times a few weeks ago: "The best play terribly and the rest play worse."

COMPETITION RESULT

THE prize of a bottle of IG Index champagne for naming the new suit combinations when the diamonds are coloured green and the clubs blue goes to Hugh Gammans from Lingfield, Surrey. He won the draw from the several entries to suggest "outer" for the old blacks, and "inner" for the old reds.

Solution and notes to No 3292: 65 by Caper

The first 25 clues have superfluous words which are the initials of the numbers between one and twenty-five in an order of a magic square, filled in from left to right, in which all rows, columns, diagonals add up to 65. The last 11 clues have superfluous words that spell out MAGIC SQUARE.

These 25 numbers are then replaced by A=1, B=2 etc to form the playfair square. As O can only be One, TO only twenty-one, the square can be constructed. Also KNAVES has AV (1,21) and so knowing 21 down will give you the position of 13(N). Etc.

The funds by which others are judged.

Such unit trust performance will raise few eyebrows in informed circles.

After all, a reputation such as Schroders' cannot be built by merely providing impressive short term results. The truth is, Schroders have consistently delivered outstanding performance for many years.

Nor is it an achievement that has gone unnoticed. We now have over £6 billion under management in unit trusts from those who already know about our track record.

Of course, you may wonder how such an accomplished performance is maintained so consistently.

The reality is that Schroders have resources above and beyond those of most comparable organisations. The Schroder Group has over 4,000 staff in more than 30 countries, 900 of which are investment personnel. Through them we obtain the in-depth research and local knowledge which has produced top performing unit trust funds.

So our results over the last three, five and ten years will come as little surprise.

All of which begs one question. Wouldn't you be better off with Schroders?

You can invest with a minimum of only £1,000 in any one unit trust and our regular investment scheme costs as little as £25 a month.

For more information on our world-class unit trust performance, just call us free or return the coupon opposite. Alternatively, contact your usual financial adviser.

Where the experts would go for growth

Anne Ashworth asks three financial gurus which trusts offer the best chance of increasing capital

The term "growth trust", a favourite phrase of financial marketing men, is very often a misnomer. Despite initial promises, too many trusts fail to prosper. We asked three leading fee-based financial advisers to pick trusts with potential for long term growth.

James Higgins, of Chamberlain de Broe: "It's my view that the turmoil in the world equity markets could continue for some time. Further US (and possibly UK) interest rate increases are in the pipeline and I confess to feeling generally quite nervous of equities. I am also against the kind of promises that investment advertising tends to make, which raise unrealistic expectations.

"All this means that I am inclined to go for a high level of safety and a very secure, if not exciting, return. The zero dividend preference shares in the TR Technology trust offer, if you hold them until the trust is wound up, a fully-covered redemption yield of around 9 per cent per annum over the next three years.

"In plain English, the trust winds up in April 1998 and the shares are due to be redeemed at 313p each. At present, they can be bought for around 237p each. The trust already has more than enough assets to meet this redemption price so it requires no growth whatsoever to offer a very satisfactory 9 per cent per annum return.

"In fact, the trust can actually afford to lose around 8 per cent per annum before this price is threatened. The shares are relatively cheap to buy. The stockbroker's commission should be around 1.5 per cent."

Richard Boyton, of Boyton Financial Services: "I am particularly enthusiastic about the UK market this year, as I expect our economy to grow and inflation to stay subdued. This should benefit the capital shares of split capital trusts which I expect to offer particularly attractive returns. My selections, which all show potential for recovery, would be General Consolidated, Murray Split Capital and St Davids, but above all Yeoman Capital. This trust has shown considerable resilience to falls in the market over the past year.

"Any capital growth in these shares will be tax-free for those who do not make full use of their capital gains tax allowance, £5,800 in the current tax year and £6,000 from April.

"Those who have already used up their capital gains allowance should consider putting their shares into a self-select personal equity plan (Pep) sheltering any gain from tax."

James Martineau, of Morton-Wilson: "My choices for long term growth would be two unit trust with broad remits: Schroder UK Enterprise, a consistently strong performer and Perpetual's International Emerging Companies. I like the fact that the Schroder trust is not confined to blue chip names. It can invest in any size of company, allowing the managers to take advantage of any good opportunities that come their way. Currently slightly more than 10 per cent of the fund is invested in engineering companies, with around 8 per cent each in banks and oil exploration and production.

"The managers of the Perpetual trust also have a wide brief. Despite the trust's name, it is not restricted to emerging markets and can invest worldwide in small-to-medium companies. Currently the trust has 17 per cent of its assets in the USA, the same amount in Japan and 14 per cent in the UK."

BRIEFINGS

MOST of the personal equity plans sold between now and the end of the tax year, on April 5, will be based on investment or unit trusts. Close to 1,000 of these so-called "Managed Peps" are now on sale. If you want to compare terms before investing, read the Chase de Vere Pep Guide, price £12.95 (freephone 0800 526082) which sets out details of charges, annual management fees and past performance.

■ If you need guidance through the selection maze, you can follow the best-buy lists of managed Peps prepared by analysts such as Allenbridge (0800 339999), BESt Investment (0171-312 0100) and the David Aaron Partnerhsip (01908 281544).

Save £285 on your next PEP.

Many companies have an initial charge of 5% of the contribution on Personal Equity Plans (PEPs). That's a hefty £300 if you decide to invest the £6,000 maximum.

The Equitable PEP, on the other hand, has an initial charge of just ¼% - £15 on an investment of £6,000 - and this saving of £285 would be invested for you right from the word 'go'.

This makes The Equitable PEP - a tax-free savings plan - an effective way to ease yourself into the stock market, and add a little extra 'pep' to your savings.

Furthermore, you have the choice of taking income from the plan in cash or having it automatically reinvested in the plan. Whichever you decide, the plan is entirely free of income and capital gains tax.

Remember that the value of units and the income from them can go down as well as up. The information above is based on current legislation which can change in the future.

If you would like details, by post and by telephone, on The Equitable PEP, contact Equitable Unit Trust Managers on Aylesbury (01296) 26226 or send off the coupon below.

How much of your £6,000 investment is removed by initial charges before it gets off the starting blocks?

£300 REMOVED	£120 REMOVED	£15 REMOVED
INITIAL CHARGES 5%	INITIAL CHARGES 2%	INITIAL CHARGES ¼%

The Equitable PEP is a unit trust Personal Equity Plan, with all the attendant tax advantages. The tax-free nature of the plan, combined with the simplicity of regular savings makes it an excellent choice for accumulating a lump sum. If you already have a capital sum to invest, that's fine too.

Flexibility

Flexibility is the keynote of the plan, so that you are not committed to paying identical contributions each month.

And a choice of unit trusts means that you can match your Equitable PEP to your fundamental investment philosophy whether that favours capital growth, income, or a combination of the two.

Robert Miller is told that investors can get the best of both worlds from investment trust units

The 'ultimate' way of spreading risk

If you really want to achieve the ultimate spread of risk in stock market terms you can put your money in a unit trust which in turn invests in investment trusts.

The concept has proved popular enough for the Association of Unit Trusts and Investment Funds (Autif) to have introduced a special category, Investment Trust Units, under which there are now 14 trusts listed from groups such as Gartmore, M&G, Save & Prosper, Equitable, Exeter and Stewart Ivory.

The catch is that you will almost inevitably face an element of double charging. As well as the unit trust's annual charge of 1-1.5 per cent, the underlying investment trusts in which they invest will also have an annual fee.

The unit trust manager cannot negotiate a discount for investing in two or three investment trusts from the same group because each investment trust is an individual publicly listed company with shares trading on the stock market. To offer a special deal to an individual unit trust manager would be a breach of the Stock Exchange rules.

David Hume, a director of Stewart Ivory, which runs a £12 million Stewart Ivory Investment Trust unit trust, says there are savings to be made in other ways which could offset the higher charging structure. For example, he points out that trusts in the Investment Trust Units sector offer an exposure to the popular area of investment trust without incurring any dealing charges. Stewart Ivory's unit trust has 27 investment trusts in its portfolio.

As a qualifying Pep at least 50 per cent of the underlying investments are UK and European trusts but it does have an exposure to world markets through Gartmore Emerging Pacific and Baillie Gifford's Shin Nippon.

Mr Hume adds: "The investment trust units sector provides investors with the best of both worlds and it also saves having to make critical decisions on when to switch between different investment trusts." Patrick Harrington, the manager of M&G's Fund of Investment Trusts, admits there is undoubtedly an element of double charging in these unit trusts but adds that he is buying the shares of each trust at a discount to the underlying assets in its portfolio. This immediately covers some of the additional charges. M&G's unit trust invests in 60 investment trusts achieving what Mr Harrington describes as "the ultimate spread of risk".

THE TIMES

Win a £6,000 PEP

A Personal Equity Plan (PEP) is a way of investing money out of the reach of the tax man and today The Times, in association with TSB Bank, offers you the third of four opportunities to win a PEP worth £6,000.

Answer the questions below, and collect four of the six PEP tokens which will appear until next Friday, and you could win an investment in your choice of three TSB unit trusts:

- The TSB UK Income Fund aims to provide a high-income return with the potential for some capital growth over the longer term, from investments in Britain;
- The TSB UK Growth Fund invests in a wide range of UK ordinary shares and aims for long-term capital growth;
- The TSB Worldwide Growth Fund aims for long-term capital growth from a broad spread of international securities, with at least half of the fund invested in Europe.

These three funds, which were launched in November 1994, have all ranked in the top quartile of their particular unit trust sectors over the past three months.* Because of the regulations governing PEPs, winners will receive a holding in the unit trust of their choice. Provided they are eligible, they will be able to convert this to a PEP at no cost either immediately or, if they have already taken out a PEP this year, after the end of the current financial year.

A PEP investment is an excellent home for long-term savings, with all income and capital growth exempt from both income tax and capital gains tax. Readers can obtain full details of TSB PEPs at their nearest TSB Bank branch.

How to enter
Collect four of the six tokens which will be appearing over the next week and send them on a postcard with the answer to today's questions plus the tie-breaker by March 15, 1995 to: The Times Win a PEP Competition, Week 3, 16 Whitefriars Street, EC88 2NG. The winner will be selected from all correct entries received by the closing date.

* Source: Micropal offer-to-offer, income not reinvested.

The questions

1) In which year were PEPs introduced by the Chancellor in his Budget?

2) What is the name of the Governor of the Bank of England?

Tie-breaker: in no more than 15 words, explain why you would like to win a £6,000 TSB Personal Equity Plan.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1) Normal Times Newspapers competition rules apply.

2) The competition is open to individuals aged 18 and over who are UK residents.

3) The competition is not open to employees of TSB or Times Newspapers Ltd or their families.

4) The winner of this weekly competition will be announced shortly after the closing date of March 15.

5) There will be one winner for each of the weekly competitions and this will be the entrant who has correctly answered the questions and, in the opinion of the judges, has completed the tie-breaker in the most apt and original way. The decision of the judges is final and no correspondence can be entered into.

6) Proof of posting will not be accepted as proof of delivery. Responsibility cannot be accepted for entries lost or delayed in the post.

7) Winners will be notified by post within 14 days of judging. Details of the winning entry will be available by sending an SAE to the promotional address after the end of the competition.

8) Prizes will be in the form of £6,000 in one of the following unit trusts: UK Growth, UK Income, or Worldwide Growth Fund. If eligible, the winner can choose to convert the investment into the TSB Tax Free Savings Plan, TSB's Personal Equity Plan, free of charge. There is no cash alternative.

9) The promoter is TSB plc, Victoria House, Victoria Square, Birmingham, B1 1BZ. Registered in England and Wales, number 108968.

How to spot the difference

ANNE ASHWORTH

For those who already know the difference between an investment trust and a unit trust, two of the most popular investments of our age and possibly the least well understood, the following is optional. Turn the pages to find out even more.

Others start here. An investment trust is a company whose sole purpose is to invest in the shares of other companies, large or small, UK or overseas, depending on the aims set out in the trust deed. Investment trust shares are quoted on the Stock Exchange and bought and sold through stockbrokers. Although unit trusts also buy shares in companies (again depending on the dictate of the trust deed), they are not themselves quoted. The units in the trust are marketed, priced and bought and sold by the unit trust management company.

The major difference between the two lies in their charges. The entrance fee on a unit trust may still be around 5 per cent of your initial investment, although charges are being reduced and discounting is widespread. Read on for more information on trusts that can help boost your income, pay school fees and even salve your conscience.

Placing your faith in trusts

A Autif, the Association of Unit Trusts and Investment Funds, advises on unit trusts. Its investment counterpart is the Association of Investment Trust Companies. Autif, 65 Kingsway, London WC2B 6TD (0181-207 1361). AITC, Durrant House, 8-13 Chiswell Street, London EC1Y 4YY (0171-588 5347).

B Bonds — a favourite among investors in mutual funds (American unit trusts). Soon, new-style unit trust personal equity plans, (Peps), available from the late spring, will invest in fixed-interest corporate bonds, convertibles and preference shares.

C Children are particularly suitable candidates for monthly savings schemes (see "M" below).

D Discounts — once the unique selling proposition of investment trusts. When a trust stands at a discount, its shares trade below its net asset value, making it a bargain. But lately discounts have narrowed.

E Ethical — those who recycle household rubbish and fit catalytic converters also want squeaky clean investments. Both investment and unit trust groups offer ethical funds. See page 13.

F Foreign & Colonial's Investment trust is the oldest of its type, reaching its 127th birthday this year. At £1.4 billion, it was also the biggest until last year's flotation of the venture capital group 3i.

G Growth is the dream of most investors and the promise of fund managers who promote their wares. For a selection of growth funds, recommended by leading financial advisers, see page 15.

H Homebuyers, tiring of the uncertainties of the endowment are turning to Peps, investing in either investment or unit trusts to repay their loans. On pages 8-9, we assess which method stands the best chance of clearing your mortgage in full.

I Income promises have encouraged many investors to turn to investment and unit trusts. However, a higher income may only be available at the expense of your capital. (See pages 4-5)

J Japan is accessible to small investors via investment and unit trusts. But the cautious limit Tokyo exposure to 10 per cent.

K Kleinwort Benson and Mercury Asset Management both launched European Privatisation investment trusts in 1994, designed to benefit from the international state sell-off bonanza.

L Lower charges have always been a key attraction of the investment trust. Unit trusts, by contrast, can be relatively expensive, charging an initial 5-6 per cent. But competition is forcing unit trust charges lower.

M Monthly savings plans allow you to invest in a trust, even if you can only spare £20 a month. Investment trust savings plans are listed in the AITC's Monthly Information Service. The annual subscription is £28 but the first 100 Times readers to write to AITC (see above) can get the service free for one year. Closing date March 6. Mark your envelope MIS/Times offer.

N Non-taxpayers, the 15 million wives, children and pensioners whose incomes are below the tax thresholds can reclaim the tax deducted from payouts from investment and unit trusts.

O Open-ended investment companies (OEICs) are unit trusts repackaged for the European market. They provide the single-price characteristic of investment trusts but, as with unit trusts, this reflects the value of underlying assets. Already on sale from the Dublin and Luxembourg.

P Peps, devised to encourage the share buying habit, have instead boosted the sales of investment and unit trusts. You may invest up to £6,000 in a qualifying fund. The trend towards lower Pep charges means that their tax concessions will not so easily be wiped out.

Q Qualifying funds are those investment and unit trusts which have at least 50 per cent of their holdings in the UK, or other countries of the European Union. Your full £6,000 annual Pep allowance can be invested in this type of trust.

R Retirement should be leisured, not fraught with financial worries. Investment-trust based pensions are gaining in popularity in response to the high charges on traditional insurance company pension plans (see page 12). Making the right choice of growth trusts (see page 15) should help.

S Shares in an investment trust, unlike units in a unit trust, are priced by the market. If there are no buyers, the price of the shares, will fall to a discount, below the value of the trust's assets, regardless of their value.

T Trustees look after your interests, ensuring that the trust's managers abide by the terms of the trust deed which sets out the investment aims. All investments are held in the trustees' name. Large specialist departments at banks are usually enlisted to undertake this role.

U Units in unit trusts have two prices: the offer price at which you buy the unit when you invest in the trust, and the bid price which you receive if you sell. The difference between the two is the spread which can range from 0-7 per cent. The prices, set by the managers, reflect the value of the trust's assets.

V Venture capital investment trusts invest in rising companies with assets of less than £10 million. Tax breaks for investors willing to put their money at risk.

W Warrants give you the right to buy shares in an investment trust at a set price, or before a specific date. For the adventurous only. Find out why on page 7.

X X-rated trusts include emerging market trusts concentrating on an individual country. Another sector for those investors with nerves of steel. See page 6.

Y Yields show the return you are receiving on the capital you have invested. The yield on a unit trust is calculated by dividing the distribution per unit by the unit price. You then multiply by 100 to get a percentage. Unit trust yields are quoted gross, before tax is deducted.

Z Zero dividend preference shares, or "zeros" are a species of split capital investment trust share which offer capital growth, but no income. Useful, in series, for school fees. See page 10.

The case for focusing on income

Funds that offer high income have become increasingly popular with private investors. Helen Pridham reports

If you want your capital to earn extra income, unit trusts have much to offer. Over the past two years, unit trusts specialising in earning income have proved to be the biggest attraction among all unit trusts; last year they were at the top of the industry's private investor best-selling chart, bringing in total net new investment of more than £1.3 billion.

This new-found popularity has had as much to do with low interest rates as with investors suddenly recognising the intrinsic merits of unit trusts. Yields of 4-10 per cent on investments starting at only £500 compared very favourably with the returns on building society accounts, tempting many people to switch. There was also the extra benefit that, when bought through a personal equity plan, the income from a unit trust can be obtained tax free.

Investors face a difficult choice, however, when selecting an income fund. Although there are many identical sounding income trusts offered by a wide range of companies, there are distinct differences between them, and it is crucial that investors check a fund's investment policy and track record so they have a rough idea of what to expect in the future.

UK equity income funds comprise the largest sector. They invest mainly in high yielding UK shares and pass on the dividends they receive to investors on a half-yearly or quarterly basis. There are currently 113 of these funds worth a total of more than £11 billion.

Another fast-growing income category is UK balanced funds, which include 56 trusts valued at nearly £3 billion. They combine share investments with holdings of fixed interest securities or derivatives to boost yields.

Then there are the gilt and fixed interest funds, currently amounting to £1.5 billion, which invest in government securities and corporate bonds for maximum income. The number of these funds is expected to grow rapidly in the coming months when the new corporate bond Peps get the go-ahead from the Inland Revenue.

So how should you choose from this wide range of unit trusts? The answer depends partly on your need for income and partly on timescale. While a high yielding unit trust with a fixed interest content may be attractive in the short term, it is unlikely to deliver the long-term growth in income and capital for which lower yielding equity trusts are renowned.

Peter Edwards, of Premier Unit Trust Brokers in Bristol, has been measuring the growth of income and capital from income funds for the past 19 years. He picks the winners and losers in terms of best income and capital growth over the previous five years.

The gap in returns is considerable. This year's survey of the top and bottom 12 funds showed dividend growth over five years averaged, respectively, 22 per cent and 20 per cent, while capital growth averaged 56 per cent and 10 per cent in the same period.

Mr Edwards comments: "One predictable factor in the poor total return is the relatively high yield. Time and again in previous studies, we have noted how the poorer funds at the bottom have the higher yields. There is no magic in this; it is an accepted fact in investment management. You can't have your cake and eat it too."

He is somewhat sceptical, therefore, of the long term returns that income investors will gain from the new breed of corporate bond funds. "What's the good of a higher-than-average yield initial dividend cheque, if it doesn't get fatter every year?" he asks.

Even investment managers with lower yielding unit trusts have found it difficult to give investors a steadily rising income year on year, during a period when the recession took its toll on company profits and led many to prune back their dividends.

Last year, in spite of the better news on dividends, another monitoring exercise carried out by Income Fund Analysis found

For investors who worry how their money is used, Liz Dolan reports on the growing sector of ethical funds

Profits with principles

Ethical and environmentally friendly investment links peace of mind with profits for kind-hearted investors and stern moralists alike.

Funds in this category normally avoid proscribed areas, such as the manufacture of weapons, tobacco and alcoholic beverages and companies that do business with oppressive regimes. In addition, many refuse to invest in environmentally threatening activities such as chemicals or landfill sites.

Others are not content simply to avoid dodgy sectors, but actively seek out ventures that operate in a positively green and/or socially responsible way.

The first ethical unit trust was Friends Provident's Stewardship trust, launched in 1984 and still going strong. Peter Silvester, investment director, says: "There was no ethical sector as such, and we weren't particularly optimistic. We thought we might attract £5 million in the first year. In fact, we pulled double that amount in the first 15 months."

The company has since added two more unit trusts, an investment trust and a pension fund to the list. There are now 18 ethical unit trusts operating in a £15 billion sector including Eagle Star Environmental Opportunities, CIS (Co-operative Insurance Services) Environmental, Jupiter Ecology, Scottish Equitable Ethical, Acorn Ethical, NM Conscience and Clerical Medical Evergreen.

Investment trusts have been much slower to embrace this area, with only Commercial Union, Jupiter International and Friends Provident prepared to test the water so far.

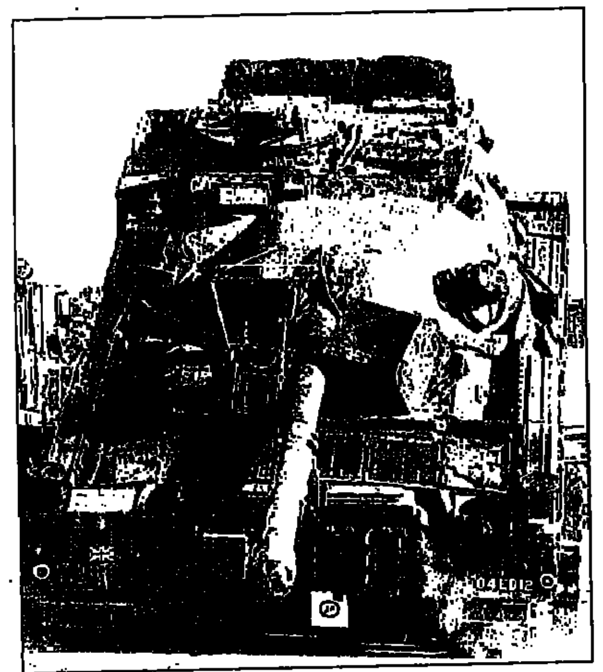
Before investing, always make sure that the underlying aims of your chosen trust are in line with your own. This is not always as simple as it sounds. Take vivisection. Do you fundamentally disagree with the whole concept, or are you willing to accept the use of animals for medical research?

Or consider the dilemma posed by the investment policy of the most recent addition to the ethical unit trust sector, Henderson Touche Remnant's Ethical trust. According to Kate Murphy, the fund manager: "We won't invest in alcohol producers, but we may want to include supermarkets which almost invevitably will have an alcohol section."

Find out how investment decisions are made. Some trusts allow fund managers free rein, while others have an advisory committee or, like Clerical Medical's Evergreen, include investors in the decision making.

Watch out for changes in the investment mix. The Stewardship trust used to hold shares in Ranks Hovis McDougalls, for instance, but sold out when RHM was bought by Tomkins, owner of Smith & Wesson, the gunmaker.

Ethical investment is not likely to make your fortune. But at least you can feel slightly less guilty than you may otherwise have done the next time British-made weapons are used by an oppressive regime to slaughter insurgents, or you are faced with pictures of laboratory-tortured animals or polluted rivers.



No tanks: weapons are out for ethical funds

—CAN— DRIP-FEEDING INTO EQUITIES BUILD YOU —A— HEALTHIER PORTFOLIO ?

Acting at the right time is key to success in the stock market. A good way to buy is to drip-feed your money into the market regularly. This means a fixed amount buys more shares when prices are low, and less when they're high. Known as 'pound cost averaging', it has become increasingly popular – helping people build up more shares for their money than they could by buying them all at once.

Investment Trusts have had an excellent long-term track record since the 1860s. Your risk is spread over as many as 200 companies. And, as public companies, Investment Trusts are listed on the London Stock Exchange.

Special savings schemes enable you to take advantage of this, starting from £25 a month. Regular or occasional lump sum investments can be made, while dealing and management costs are kept remarkably low.

New kids on the pension block

Caroline Merrell examines pension plans that rely on investment trusts

The Scottish group Ivory & Sime is poised to join the growing band of fund managers offering personal pensions based on investment trusts. These new-style pension schemes have developed amid controversy over charges on personal pension plans and their impact on final returns.

The schemes' attraction is enhanced by new rules forcing insurance companies to make clear what percentage of pension premium disappears in administrative fees and commission.

Last year, a Money Management survey ranked Foreign & Colonial, the first fund management group to offer an investment trust pension, the lowest-cost pension plan provider.

The Ivory & Sime investment trust pension, intended to be launched in the summer, is likely to offer two basic choices: to invest in a range of Ivory & Sime's nine investment trusts, or in a much wider portfolio of funds that will include other companies' investment trusts. This plan will be sold through independent financial advisers.

Although Foreign & Colonial will soon deal through IFAs, it has so far operated on an execution-only basis, offering no advice beyond a customer helpline. Investors in this plan can choose between the Foreign & Colonial Investment Trust, holding a wide range of shares in companies around the world; the F&C Income and Growth Trust, backing UK blue chip companies; and the F&C Emerging Markets Trust, investing for growth in developing countries. For those approaching retirement, there is a cash fund to reduce exposure to equity markets.

Premiums can be paid monthly or annually. Charges on the plan are £100 initially, plus £50 a year. Foreign & Colonial also charges an annual fund management fee of 0.5 per cent per year. Switching between funds costs £15.

The version of the plan to be sold via financial advisers will offer a broader range of investment trusts in riskier markets, including a Latin-American trust and a US smaller companies trust. Anyone who uses this route will have to pay either commission or a fee to the adviser. It will be up to the adviser to make sure that the plan moves into lower-risk markets or cash just prior to retirement. Mr Walton says: "We have for the first time begun to take transfers into the IFA version of the plan."

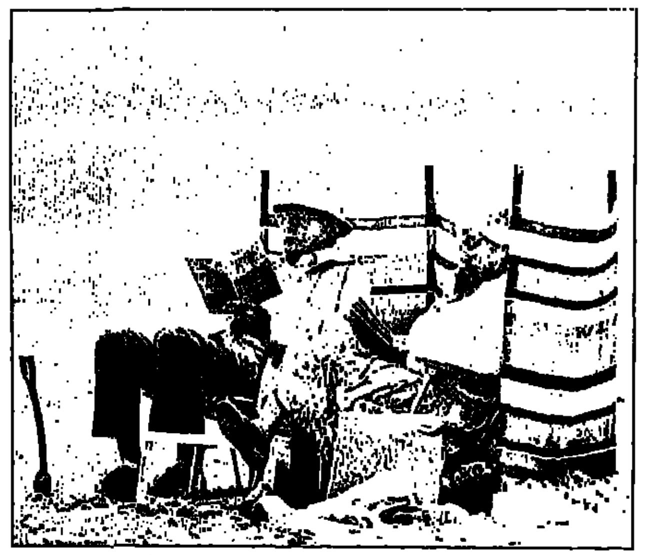
Dunedin is another Scottish investment manager that offers a pension based on investment trusts. The pension, also sold on execution-only terms, has Classical and Selector options.

The first option will allow investment into two trusts — one buying shares in UK companies and another with international diversification. Dunedin will manage the investment split between the two.

The second option is aimed at the more sophisticated investor and will give the choice of investment in three more of Dunedin's investment trusts, including a Japanese trust, and a smaller companies trust. It will be up to the investor to monitor the performance of the plan and decide whether to switch their investment around.

Again, the plan has a £100 set-up charge and an annual charge of £50. The annual management charge on the plan is 1 per cent, double that on the Hypo Foreign & Colonial plan.

Charles Levett-Scrivener, of Towry Law, independent financial adviser, says: "Investment trust pensions do have the advantage of low cost. But there are a couple of wrinkles. Investment trusts do have the greater capacity for growth, but as they invest solely in shares, rather than in a spread of different investments, there is some risk."



Rising tide: investment trust pensions are growing has found the extra income he got from Prolific "very useful"

ROB HOWARTH

How the doctor got a healthy return

When Dr Geoffrey Clayton invested £750 in Prolific High Income in March 1975, some months after its launch, he admits he did not really know what he was doing. He says: "I had been left a bit of money by an aunt and it was her financial adviser who recommended that I should put some of it into shares via a unit trust. He recommended this trust, and I followed his advice."

Dr Clayton, 66, a retired GP, who now runs Take Heart, his own consultancy, in Norwich advising company employees how to minimise their chances of heart disease, says he has found the income he has received from the trust over the years "very useful". It has increased tenfold since he first bought the trust, rising steadily from £40.67 in 1975 to £433.86 last year. "It was partiularly helpful having some extra income when we were educating the children," he says.

What has pleased him most, though, is the rise in the value of his capital. His original investment is now worth £10,449. "It is nice to know I have it there to dip into if I need it," he says. He doesn't worry about stock market's ups and downs and remains philosophical about them.

"As long as you hang on and don't panic, it seems to come right again," he says. Apart from a dip in the value of the fund between 1989 and 1990 due to the onset of the recession, the capital growth of Prolific High Income has risen relatively smoothly year by year since its inception.

Dr Clayton admits that he considers himself a casual rather than a sophisticated investor, and feels that unit trusts take the hassle out of stock market investment. The arrangement leaves him to monitor people's blood pressure while someone else monitors his money.

HELEN PRIDHAM

that in a survey of 145 income unit trusts half had paid out less income in 1994 than in 1993.

On a five-year view there were only 15 funds that had maintained or increased their income distributions for each calendar year since 1990.

Since 1981, only two funds have managed to increase their income consistently — Kleinwort Benson High Yield and Prolific High Income. Two others — M&G Dividend and M&G Equity Income — have never cut their distributions, although some years the payout has stayed unchanged. Prolific High Income, which was launched 20 years ago, has increased income to investors each year. Mike Webb, sales and marketing director, says: "The secret of our success has been that the fund managers have not chosen shares with high yields, but shares in companies which they believe will achieve above average earnings growth and therefore pay out rising dividends in future."

This means that in spite of its name the fund has produced a lower than average yield for a fund of its type. It recently stood at 3.7 per cent

GT Income, another solid performer, has a higher yield of 4.7 per cent. Like all these funds, its capital value has fallen over the past year, but in the longer term equity income funds often produce better capital returns than specialist capital growth funds.

Nick Train, GT's investment manager, explains how capital growth is achieved: "The reason is because shares with above average yields can be undervalued. I am always looking for those stocks where I believe the general market pessimism about their future is unjustified. When things start to come good, that company's share price moves up. As a result, the yield goes down and I then sell and look for a better prospect. With this sell discipline at work, the fund is continually getting a capital boost."

> Time and again, we've seen how the poorer funds have the higher yields

Both Mr Webb and Mr Train expect share dividends to rise this year by around 8 per cent, which should enable most fund managers to boost the income paid out to unit trust investors.

Mr Train acknowledges the attraction of the new corporate bond trusts for investors who need a high immediate income. Perhaps the best thing that such investors can do is to buy some of each type of fund and have a foot in both camps.

In search of new horizons

Caroline Merrell on the chances of a resurgence in emergent markets

Dismal returns in emerging market funds last year could signal a golden opportunity for those who have not already invested.

Many emerging market fund managers believe that the hammering taken by the Latin American and Hong Kong markets could mean shares are available at a discount.

Templeton, an established emerging market fund manager, usually has about 20 per cent of its global emerging market funds in cash. It has been gradually reducing this exposure to 15 per cent over the past few weeks to take advantage of what it believes to be a buying opportunity. Ken Nicholson, Templeton marketing manager, says: "We are looking at places where people are selling. We are particularly interested in Hong Kong as a gateway to growth in China."

Last year, millions of pounds was poured into emerging market unit trusts and investment trusts. The argument was a simple one: the economies of the Far East, Latin America and Eastern Europe were set to grow at a much faster rate than the developed countries.

Many of the major fund managers launched trusts on the back of this expected growth. However, last year also graphically illustrated some of the risks involved. Two of the areas that appeared most promising — China and Mexico — fell dramatically over the year.

The fall in both these markets also had knock-on effects for their neighbours. The sudden devaluation of the Mexico peso hit the Brazilian, Chilean and Argentinian markets. Fears about China hit Hong Kong, which also fell sharply. Hong Kong was also affected by the rise in US interest rates.

For example, the Abtrust Latin American Unit Trust fell by 40 per cent over the year and Gartmore's emerging markets fund by about 50 per cent.

Many fund managers believe that it will take more than a year for the losses sustained during the devaluation crisis to be made up. Many are claiming that now would be a good time to invest.

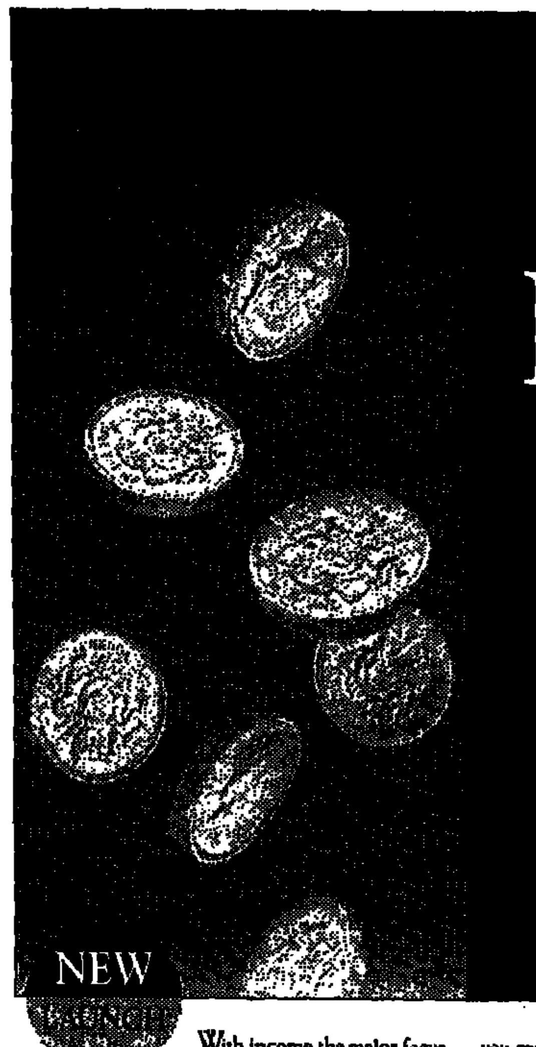
The poor 1994 performance of emerging markets underlines the importance of choosing the right fund manager with a good long term track record. It also underlines the importance of taking a long-term view.

Fund Research, which analyses fund managers, says it is vital for anyone who wishes to invest in emerging markets to study the performance of the company's funds. In these types of trusts, it is also best to choose a fund that has the maximum amount of diversification.

For example, Perpetual's global emerging companies fund only fell about 20 per cent over the year, and Invesco global emerging markets fund fell about 30 per cent. Kleinwort Benson spreads the risk on its emerging market investment trust by putting only 10 per cent in any one market.

Last year's turmoil in the emerging markets begs the question, where are the best places to invest? Jean de Boille, emerging market strategist at Hypo Foreign & Colonial, says he expects the fastest grower in Latin America to be Peru. "This is a satellite market, but it has strong potential. Argentina could provide some strong growth, but it is currently carrying a high risk premium," he says.

Hypo Foreign & Colonial is also keen on India as a place to invest. Mr de Boille says: "In dollar terms, the market rose by 10 per cent last year. It was one of the few markets that rose at all last year. We expect that to continue over the next year."



The Fidelity Strategic Income PEP.

High income with growth potential.

The New Generation of PEPs.

With income the major focus for most investors, recent proposals to allow high yielding Corporate Bonds to be held tax-free in PEPs have been welcomed.

However the new rules for full Corporate Bond PEPs will not be introduced before the tax year-end - too late if you want to invest your PEP allowance before April.

Maximise this year's PEP allowance

Now, with the launch of the Fidelity Strategic Income PEP, you can capitalise on these new rules as they unfold. And, perhaps more important, with the prospect of a change of government and significantly higher tax rates you can do so before the end of the tax year.

The PEP will initially invest in a balance of high-quality bond investments and carefully -selected UK blue chip shares, to offer an attractive tax-free income of 5.2% immediately, together with capital growth potential.

But the real benefit of the Fidelity Strategic Income PEP is that it can make the most of the new legislation - increasing its bond holdings when the rules allow and boosting its income to you - up to 6.25%* tax-free.

Launch price held for 3 weeks

What's more, there's a fixed price offer available from 6th till 27th March. So make sure you don't miss this chance. Call Fidelity InvestorLine on 0800 414171 today, return the coupon or talk to your Independent Financial Adviser.

Helen Pridham examines the funds with a share for every need

Trusts that work on the principle of divide and conquer

In recent years, most new investment trusts launched have been split capital trusts. The big difference from the conventional variety is that instead of offering one type of share, a split capital trust could have three or even four.

And instead of all investors having an equal entitlement to any income and capital growth generated by a trust's investments, each class of share is entitled to a different return.

Kean Seager, a financial adviser at Whitechurch Securities in Bristol, says: "The attraction of split capital trusts is that they enable you to pick out a share that can meet your investment needs quite precisely. So they can be used for quite specific applications such as school fees planning or providing a high retirement income."

Another unusual feature of these trusts is that they have a fixed life, seven to ten years, say, so that all shareholders' demands can be met by the end of that time. But investors should not be too concerned about the maturity dates. "Sometimes people think they are going to be locked in until the end of the trust's life," says Mr Seager. "This is not the case. Indeed, it often makes sense to sell early."

Split capital trusts were initially set up in the 1960s as a tax wheeze and while saving tax is no longer their raison d'être, they can still be highly tax-efficient investments. Returns on zero-dividend and capital shares are treated as capital gains and are tax-free, providing they fall within an investor's annual capital gains tax allowance. Income shares held in a personal equity plan enable you to maximise tax-free income.

One of the latest split capital trusts to arrive is Henderson Touche Remnant's Income & Growth. The trust consists of zero-dividend preference shares and income ordinary shares. James de Sausmarez, HTR managing director, believes the income shares will have particular appeal at present. He explains: "Many investors are looking for a high income at the moment, and the great advantage of a split capital trust is that it enables them to get an enhanced income from a straightforward portfolio of good quality shares."

Nevertheless, while the investment portfolios may be straightforward, the structure of the trusts can be relatively complicated and investors need to be sure they know what they are buying. Whichever type of share you buy, a key factor to look for is the "hurdle" rate; this shows how much the trust's investments must rise to ensure you get your share of the capital at the end of the trust's life. If the rate is a negative figure, this indicates how much the value of the portfolio could drop and still provide your due.

Class discrimination: zero-dividend shares, bought in series, can meet school fees

There are three main types of shares in a split capital trust:

- Zero-dividend preference shares: No income is paid on "zeros". Instead, they have a fixed maturity price equivalent to a set growth rate on their initial issue price. Their price on the stock market generally rises as the term of the trust progresses. Zeros are regarded as the lowest-risk split capital share because they are normally the first share to be repaid. Zeros are ideally suited for retirement capital or, in series, for school fees.

- Income shares: Holders of these shares get all the income from a trust's investments even though they may have supplied, say, only half the capital. So they are getting in this case double their actual share of the income. This is why yields on these shares can reach 20 per cent. However, it is important to look at what capital comes back at maturity.

There are several different varieties of income shares. The first, and most common, have a redemption price that is the same as their issue price: you simply get back your original investment, assuming zero holders have been repaid. Annuity shares, however, may cost 100p but only provide you with a nominal repayment of 1p a share. These tend to have the highest yields, but should not be purchased without expert advice. A third type is the ordinary income share, which entitles you to any capital left at redemption after paying off other shareholders. So they are more like the shares of a conventional investment trust. Income shares are often recommended for retired people who have less need for capital growth.

- Capital Shares: These shares are generally regarded as the most risky of the split capital shares. Their prices are very volatile, moving further up or down than the actual movements in value of the trust's assets. They are also at the end of the line for repayment. But they get all that is left in the kitty, so the gains can be substanital. These shares are only suitable for investors who do not need income and can accept above-average risks.

WINNER "Best Investment Trust Manager" MICROPAL 1994

The Witan PEP

The WITAN PEP offers the full tax advantages of a PEP and is an ideal core holding for an investment portfolio.

SIZE, REPUTATION AND RANGE

Witan Investment Company plc invests in the UK and internationally. It is the largest of the trusts managed by Henderson Touche Remnant, one of Britain's leading investment trust managers.

IMPRESSIVE PERFORMANCE

£1,000 invested in Witan in 1924, when the company's shares were first offered to the public, would now be worth no less than £3.2 million*. More recent performance has also been impressive. Over the last ten years Witan has delivered a total return of 272.3%†.

LOW CHARGES

There is NO INITIAL CHARGE on the WITAN PEP, simply a £30 annual fee and a 1% dealing fee.

*†Source: AITC to 31.1.95 share price total return. Figures for Witan's performance since 1924 are source Henderson and are based on net asset values at July 1924 and December 1994, assuming net income reinvested. Please note that past performance is no guide to the future. The value of a PEP, and the income from it, can go down as well as up as a result of market and currency fluctuations and you may not get back the amount you originally invested. Taxes relating to PEPs may change if the law changes and the value of tax relief will depend upon your circumstances.

TAX FREE INCOME & GROWTH

Keeping financial advice in the family

The need to generate extra income after a divorce spurred Anne Pepper, 59, a former nursing sister, to invest in 1988 in the income shares of River & Mercantile, the split capital investment trust. At the time, she bought £500 of shares and since she took early retirement, two years later, she has added to her holding, which is now worth about £10,000. The income provides a boost to her NHS pension. She holds the shares through a personal equity plan, so the income is tax free.

The first shares she bought cost 88p each and had a yield of about 6 per cent. They now stand at 109p, a capital gain of 24 per cent. The income has also risen from 7.6p per share to 12.3p, an increase of 60 per cent, which gives a current yield of 11.3 per cent.

Although the income did go down slightly during the recession, it has now recovered to the level it was a few of years ago, and Mrs Pepper is hoping that it will continue to rise.

However, she says that she is actually much more interested in people than money and is happy to accept the recommendations of her financial adviser, Kean Seager, of Whitechurch Securities, who is also her son-in-law.

He says: "Advising your mother-in-law to put money into something must be the real test of your confidence in an investment." He points out that he expects to sell Mrs Pepper's shares before River & Mercantile reaches the end of its life in the year 2000, when the income shares are due to be redeemed at 100p, in order to preserve her capital gains.

Mr Seager has written a booklet on split capital trusts, which can be obtained free of charge by calling 0800 442266.

For those seeking guaranteed excitement

Jill Insley describes the pleasures and pitfalls of investing in warrants

Adventurous investors who do not mind risking their money may find warrants offer a powerful cocktail of exhilaration and high potential returns.

Warrants are a type of security which entitles the investor to buy a share at a set price on or before a specific date in the future. This process is known as exercising a warrant.

Companies, including investment trust companies, issue warrants to raise additional money. More than 30 investment trusts have warrants in issue, and many new trusts are launched with warrants as an incentive to attract investors. Typically investors in new trusts will receive one free warrant for every five shares they buy, which can be converted on the payment of £1.

Warrants can be traded on the Stock Exchange from a few weeks after they are issued until their exercise date. If they reach that date without being exercised, however, they no longer entitle the investor to buy a share at a predetermined price and so become worthless.

The effect of the warrant is to enhance the return to the investor. Investment trust shares often fall from their offer price immediately after launch because some of the money invested — typically 4p in every pound — is used to cover costs. The issue of a free warrant offsets this fall by providing the investor with a choice of either selling it or using it later to buy further shares.

However, if the investment trust's shares are selling at a lower value than the exercise price, the investor may as well buy the shares direct. In this case the warrants are known as being "out of the money".

When the cost of exercising the warrant is below the share price, the warrant is said to be "in the money".

Even if the warrant price plus the exercise costs add up to more than the current share price the warrant may still be worth buying if the share is likely to increase considerably in value by the exercise date.

Warrants do not pay dividends, and so are not liable for income tax. However they may incur capital gains tax.

Unfortunately, warrants bought on the open market are not eligible for inclusion in the tax shelter of a personal equity plan. But if you have received warrants as part of units in a new investment trust, these may be transferred into a Pep up to 42 days after they have been issued, provided they are not traded separately.

Warrant prices magnify any fluctuations in the price of the underlying shares, and the market moves extremely fast. This volatility make warrants completely unsuitable for investors who break into a cold sweat every time their BT shares fall a few pence.

The extent of the risk can be illustrated by the performance of funds investing in warrants during 1994. Investment adviser Hargreaves Lansdown launched its HL Warrant Portfolio unit trust last April and even the company's managing director, Stephen Lansdown, admits the fund has turned in a wretched performance so far.

"It's one for people with strong hearts," he says. "We're down about 30 per cent since we started, but it's not something one should be desperately worried about because in warrants you have to go through some pretty rough times."

Hargreaves Lansdown's unit trust is not alone in losing money. Exeter Fund Managers runs a unit trust which invests predominantly in warrants issued by investment trusts. The Exeter Warrant Fund has fallen 29 per cent in value during the year to the end of January, although it has grown by 116 per cent overall since its launch in February 1992.

The fund also invests a minimum of 20 per cent of its value in zero dividend preference shares.

Scottish Value Management runs the Warrants and Value Investment Trust, a £30 million fund investing in a global range of warrants issued by other investment trusts and commercial companies, and investment trust capital shares. Although the trust's net asset value has grown by 42.5 per cent since its launch in March 1993, this has fallen 13.7 per cent in the year to the end of December.

Having said that, all three fund managers are reasonably confident that the warrants market is be about to start moving upwards again.

High risk: warrants will appeal to the adventurous

Are endowments terminally ill?

Sara McConnell compares trust savings plans with the more traditional methods of repaying the mortgage

Borrowers are deserting endowment mortgages in droves and turning to saving through personal equity plans linked to unit trusts or investment trusts to pay off their loans, or taking out repayment mortgages.

Public disenchantment with endowments as a means of paying off mortgages is reflected in the 1994 sales figures published by the Association of British Insurers last month. Total sales have nearly halved since 1991, with 757,000 plans being sold in 1994 against 1.4 million in 1991. There are no figures to show how many unit and investment trust savings plans and Peps have been sold to cover mortgages, but the Association of Unit Trusts and Investment Funds (Autif) claims that "anecdotally", sales are increasing.

Lenders are also keener to accept unit trust or Pep savings plans to pay off mortgages than they used to be, says Autif. Repayment mortgages have also taken on a new lease of life, according to mortgage brokers. The endowment mortgage's fall from grace has been dramatic over the past two years, as press reports slammed them for being expensive, inflexible and unsuitable for many.

Bonuses fell along with inflation and the stock market and there were fears that some policies would not pay off the mortgage. People cashing in policies early (typically after five years) found they almost always got back less than they put in, because most of the charges are levied upfront. By contrast, unit trust savings plans, including Peps, charge less upfront but levy annual management charges, which have a significant impact over 25 years.

So if you have an endowment already, will you get less out of it? Or have these policies been unjustly maligned? If you have not got an endowment, or are moving house, would you do better with a unit trust savings plan or Pep to pay off your loan? Or should you take out a repayment mortgage? This is how each type of plan works:

■ An endowment is a savings plan with life assurance built in. The idea is to build up enough capital to pay off your mortgage after 25 years and give you a tax-free lump sum on top. If you die before the end of your mortgage term, the policy pays off the loan.

■ With a unit trust or investment trust savings plan you are also trying to save enough capital to pay off the mortgage at the end of the term. But income and capital gains in unit trusts are taxed; through a unit or investment trust linked to a Pep, income and capital gains are tax free. Life assurance to pay off the mortgage if you die is not included.

■ With a repayment mortgage, you are paying off increasing amounts of capital along with the interest. You will need to take out life insurance to pay off the loan if you die before the end of the term.

Of course, how you repay your loan depends on circumstances but in an attempt to compare the results of the different methods The Times asked Standard Life and Allied Dunbar, to calculate how much an investor with a £60,000 mortgage, putting £100 a month into an endowment now, would have after 25 years. Then we asked two fund managers, Fidelity and Schroders, to calculate how much an investor would get after putting £100 a month into a Pep and a unit trust plan. Finally, these were compared with a repayment mortgage.

CHRIS EADES

Time expired: the Hills were told they could expect to pay off the mortgage ten years early

[illegible]

■ Over 25 years, you would have done better with a Pep than with an endowment or a unit trust savings plan. However, this is not so much because the charges are lower. Rather, it is because of the tax breaks on Peps, which let them grow faster.

■ Unit trust savings plans do less well than Peps because gains from them are taxed. However, some unit trust savings plans would still return you more than some endowments. Many companies (including the ones featured here) charge more for investing in a unit trust directly than in the same unit trust through a Pep. Unit trusts, whether in a Pep or not, are more flexible than endowments because there are not usually any penalties for cashing in early. You can also move funds around more easily.

■ If you surrendered after five years, you would do worse with an endowment than with a Pep. But some endowments pay out much more than others.

■ Companies have different ways of calculating this apparently simple figure, which makes it difficult for investors to compare policies. Allied Dunbar works backwards, starting with the loan the policy needs to cover and calculating the premium needed to achieve the capital sum. It assumes the investment will grow at 9.25 per cent when working out the premiums, which gives it a monthly premium of £88.98, including critical illness cover. Once it has worked out the premiums, it uses the prescribed standard growth rates. Endowments are complicated by the inclusion of life cover, while you have to remember to add this cost on for Peps and unit trust savings plans.

The figures in detail

■ Fidelity: If you put £100 a month for 25 years into a Fidelity UK Growth Pep you would get £53,678 at 6 per cent (£131,702 at 12 per cent). Without charges, you would have got approximately £68,500 (£178,000). Cashing in your plan after five years would give you £6,589 (£7,658) including charges. A Fidelity UK Growth unit trust would pay £66,599 after 25 years, assuming a growth rate of 7.5 per cent. Without charges, you would have got about £86,000.

■ Schroders: £100 a month invested in a Schroders Income and Growth Fund Pep at 6 per cent over 25 years would give you £57,050 (£151,000). Without charges, you would have again got approximately £68,000 (£178,000). After five years, you would get £6,603 (£7,720) including charges. You would have to pay for life cover on top. A regular £100 payment into a Schroders Income and Growth unit trust savings plan would pay £71,148 after 25 years including charges (about £86,000 gross).

■ Standard Life. £100 invested in Standard's Homeplan endowment would be worth £67,000 after 25 years, at 7.5 per cent. Without charges deducted, you would have had an extra £19,300. If you cash in after five years you would get £6,360. The deductions include life cover and assume monthly charges will rise at 4.5 per cent a year.

■ Allied Dunbar. Your premium would be £88.98 a month (see explanation opposite). This includes life and critical illness cover of £4.75. After 25 years, your plan would be worth £48,200 at a growth rate of 7.5 per cent. Without charges, you would have got an extra £27,200. If you surrender in the first five years you will get back £2,560. The company says the final value of the plan may look low because regulators insist on low growth rates, but it is confident contributions will grow at 9.25 per cent. The figures also assume that monthly charges will rise by 6 per cent a year.

■ Repayment mortgage. You will pay a mixture of capital and interest over the term, with more interest paid at the start of the term and more capital nearer the end. Assuming that interest rates stay at 6 per cent throughout the term of the mortgage and that you are paying a total of £400 (£100 capital and £300 interest) a month, you would have paid off your loan by the twenty-third year of the mortgage term, £100 a month being slightly more than you need to pay. Apart from term assurance, you will just pay the cost of servicing the loan (6 per cent).

These figures assume life policies and unit trust savings plans grow by 7.5 per cent a year. Peps grow by a conservative 6 per cent and an optimistic 12 per cent (the rates are different because gains from Peps are tax free). Income and capital gains tax are charged on proceeds of unit trusts but not on endowments. Companies have deducted their own charges from the total invested and earned. Gross totals before charges for Schroders and Fidelity are rounded. Allied Dunbar assumes its charges will rise 6 per cent a year and Standard Life 4.5 per cent.

Early promise that has failed to pay off

Gary and Linda Hills were delighted when their financial adviser explained to them that they would be able to pay off their mortgage ten years early if they took out a Homebuilder Plus endowment policy from Guardian Royal Exchange.

Nearly eight years later, however, the policy into which they have paid more than £6,000 would be worth just £5,642 if they surrendered it.

Mr Hills has worked out that at this rate it will take 21 years to grow enough to pay off the £30,000 mortgage it was taken out to cover. Premiums on the low start, unit linked policy, which had started at £47.08 a month had risen by 10 per cent a year for six years until they reached £83.34.

Mr Hills said: "The salesman told us it would pay out a minimum of £30,000 but the reason we bought it was because he said we would pay off the mortgage in 15 years instead of 25."

Now the couple are so angry that they are negotiating with the Halifax to convert their mortgage to a repayment.

Mr Hills added: "We have scrimped and saved, my wife has given up work, we now have twin girls of two and I've lost my overtime. I rang up Guardian Royal Exchange to complain and I was so annoyed I would have leapt down the phone wire and strangled the man at the other end if I could."

Guardian said Homebuilder Plus guaranteed to pay off the mortgage after 23 years, unlike other unit-linked policies. This made it more expensive. A large part of each monthly premium was still going to pay these charges and the full amount of each month's premium would not be invested for another two and a half years. Mr Hills had been given a surrender value, in which a further penalty had been levied, rather than the actual value of his policy, the company added.
